of the courts is to attempt, on some more or less plausible theory, to sustain such agreements with at least a modicum of lip service to the usually applicable principles of contracts,⁶⁵ and, in some cases, the subscribers have been held liable when perhaps on strict principles there was not a legal consideration for the contract.⁶⁶ However, the fundamental principle that contractual undertakings to be performed in the future must be supported by a valuable consideration in order to be enforceable is not to be ignored,⁶⁷ and it has been held that an actual rather than an illusory consideration, or at least an estoppel of the promisor to object, is necessary to render a charitable subscription enforceable.⁶⁸

Statutory duty of promisee to disburse funds. In a few cases the promise has been supported partly or wholly on the theory that if the beneficiary has been authorized, by its own charter or by other legislation, to receive money and appropriate it to the purpose of the subscription, then such legislation together with the promise of the subscriber creates a legal obligation to pay the subscription,⁶⁹ it having been said that the legal duty imposed on the beneficiary to expend the fund constitutes a consideration⁷⁰ or that the right to recover under these circumstances rests on the ground of public policy.⁷¹

Moral obligation. While a moral obligation is not usually regarded as consideration for contracts generally, in at least one instance a subscription has been enforced explicitly on the ground that the promise is supported by a moral obligation.⁷²

(2) Work Done or Obligations or Expenses Incurred

It is generally held that, where the promisee, in reliance on the subscription, has assumed the performance of some duty, or has performed services, or has done work, expended money, or incurred liability, a consideration is thereby furnished for the subscriber's promise; or the doctrine of promissory estoppel may be applied.

It is generally held that, where the promisee, in reliance on the subscription, has assumed the performance of some duty,⁷³ or has performed services,⁷⁴ or has done work, expended money, or in-

Rationes decidendi

Recovery on subscription agreements has become the rule rather than the exception, and an analysis of the cases indicates the presence of three different rationes decidendi for the attainment of this result, the first being the spelling out of an ordinary bilateral contract; second, the completion of a contract which was initially unilateral; and third, the invocation of promissory estoppel.—In re De Brabant's Estate, 95 N.Y.S.2d 324, 197 Misc. 923.—In re Lord's Will, 25 N.Y.S.2d 747, 175 Misc. 921.

In considering the desirability, from a standpoint of public policy, of holding all subscriptions to charities enforceable, and, when necessary, inventing considerations sufficient for that purpose, the court stated, "But, in considering all the possible results from such a course, the inquiry arises, whether, after all, it is beneficial to society to confer upon an institution, no matter how worthy, the rights of a creditor, and the consequent power to compel one who has promised to donate to its cause, to fulfil his pledge, irrespective of how large a portion of a diminished or insolvent estate it might consume, and regardless of whether the institution has changed its position for the worse in reliance upon 'the subscription.'"—*Floyd v. curred liability,⁷⁵ a consideration is thereby furnished for the subscriber's promise; and the gratuitous promise is converted into a valid and enforceable contract.⁷⁶

In following the foregoing rules some courts have regarded the acts done, or duties or liabilities assumed, as having been done or assumed at the request of the promisor, considering that the promise to pay involves such request,⁷⁷ and contains it by implication;⁷⁸ and the performance of the acts mentioned has been considered a compliance with the request.⁷⁹ However, where the subscription is a mere naked promise, and the acts done by the beneficiary cannot be considered as having been done at the request of the subscriber, such acts do not constitute consideration for the subscription;⁸⁰ and, where there is nothing on the face of the paper to show consideration and nothing to show that the work done would not have been done were it not for the subscriptions, there is no consideration.⁸¹ The reliance that furnishes a ground for recovery need not have been exclusively on the promise of the subscriber.⁸²

Expenses in obtaining subscriptions are not such expenses as will constitute consideration for the subscription.⁸³

Estoppel in lieu of consideration. While the cases that allow recovery of subscriptions on the ground of expenditure made, or work done, in reliance on the subscription, usually state the reason in terms of consideration, there are some cases where expenditure having been made or work done, on the faith of the subscription, the court has placed the right of recovery on the ground of an estoppel invoked against the promisor,⁸⁴ and this doctrine

Application of promissory estoppel doctrine

(1) Doctrine of promissory estoppel applies so as to render charitable subscription enforceable where there is an agreement by individuals to subscribe funds for accomplishment of an enterprise which would not oth-

of promissory estoppel has been adopted in some jurisdictions as the equivalent of consideration.⁸⁵

Subscription in aid of railroad. The general rule as to work done or obligations or expenses incurred, with respect to furnishing consideration, has been applied to subscriptions in aid of a railroad,⁸⁶ and, where the railroad has performed the work, the subscriber cannot claim want or inadequacy of consideration for the contract.⁸⁷ The fact that a company was already organized to build the railroad at the time the subscription was made,⁸⁸ or that without such subscription the railroad would nevertheless have been built,⁸⁹ will not defeat the promise.

(3) Mutual Promises of Subscribers

A conflict of authority exists as to whether the mutual promises of subscribers constitute a consideration for the subscription.

erwise be undertaken or continued, or where charities have incurred obligations, expended money, or performed undertakings which they would not otherwise have incurred, expended, or performed without regard or reference to subscriptions of other persons.—Lake Bluff Orphanage v. Magill's Ex'rs, 204 S.W.2d 224, 305 Ky. 391.—Floyd v. Christian Church Widows and Orphans Home, 176 S.W.2d 125, 296 Ky. 196, 151 A.L.R. 1230.

(2) However, right of the charity to take action on promise contained in a charitable subscription must be gauged by terms of the instrument as they may be judicially construed, coupled with factor of whether those terms are of a character which promisor should have reasonably expected to induce action of a definite and substantial character on part of promisee.—Lake Bluff Orphanage v. Magill's Ex'rs, 204 S.W.2d 224, 305 Ky. 391.

(3) Furthermore, it has been held that the doctrine of promissory estoppel need be applied only where a request or invitation that the promisee go on with his work cannot be implied in fact from the subscription agreement.—*I. & I. themselves, provide a sufficient consideration to render them enforceable,⁹⁵ although mutual agreements to donate land for the construction of a railroad, to donate funds for the construction of a highway, and to subscribe to stock of a corporation, as discussed in Corporations § 295, have been upheld on this ground, as well as other grounds.⁹⁶

(4) Mutual Promises of Subscriber and Payee or Beneficiary

An express agreement by the payee or beneficiary to do certain acts in return for the subscription is sufficient consideration, and it has been held that acceptance of the subscription creates at least an implied promise of the payee or beneficiary to carry out the purpose for which the subscription is made, which is deemed consideration for the promise to pay.

An express agreement by the payee or beneficiary to do certain acts in return for the subscription is sufficient consideration.⁹⁷ In endeavoring to sustain subscription contracts, some courts have held that by acceptance of the subscription the payee or beneficiary promises, at least impliedly,⁹⁸ to carry out the purpose for which the subscription is made, this promise being deemed consideration for the promise to pay.⁹⁹ However, this view has been rejected on the ground that the promise implied in the acceptance involves no act advantageous to the subscriber or detrimental to the beneficiary or payee, and hence does not involve a case of mutual promises,¹ and that the duty of the payee would arise from trusteeship rather than a contractual promise.²

(5) Benefit to Promisor

It has been held that a benefit to the promisor, although it is enjoyed by him in common with other persons, or even with the public generally, furnishes a consideration for the promise.

It has been held occasionally that the object being meritorious, and beneficial to the promisor, this benefit to him, although it is to be enjoyed by him in common with other persons, or even with the public generally, furnishes a consideration for the promise,³ and the general rule discussed in Contracts § 84 that the benefits accruing to property owners from the establishment of public buildings, military headquarters, or manufacturing plants or other private buildings constitute a valuable consideration for their contracts relative thereto has been applied to subscription contracts.⁴ It has also been held that the consideration need not be of any benefit to the subscriber to a public⁵ or charitable⁶ purpose.

§ 6. — Failure of Consideration

The rules relating to failure of consideration in contracts generally apply to subscriptions.

The rules relating to failure of consideration in contracts generally apply to subscriptions.⁷ In determining whether the consideration for a subscription has failed, the consideration is tested by the situation existing at the time it is sought to enforce the subscription,⁸ and a total failure of consideration may be shown in bar of an action to enforce the subscription.⁹ However, the consolidation of corporations in furtherance of their general purpose does not constitute a failure of consideration absolving a subscriber from his obligation,¹⁰ and it has been held that there is no failure of consideration where, although the terms of the subscription have not been literally complied with, there has been a substantial compliance therewith.¹¹

§ 7. Validity of Assent in General

The rules as to the validity and reality of assent to contracts generally apply to subscriptions.

The rules as to the validity and reality of assent to contracts generally apply to subscriptions.¹² The effect of fraud and misrepresentation on subscriptions is discussed infra § 8.

Failure of stipulated consideration

Since the only failure of consideration sufficient to constitute a defense is failure in the very consideration stipulated by the terms of the pledge itself, use of funds by association for purposes other than that for which funds were pledged would not constitute failure of consideration for pledge contract in action to recover amount remaining unpaid on subscription.—Young Men's Christian Ass'n v. Caward, 239 N.W. 41, 213 Iowa 408.

§ 8. Fraud and Misrepresentation

Rules as to the effect of fraud, and misrepresentation without fraud, relating to contracts generally apply to subscriptions,¹³ and hence a misrepresentation, if made innocently, has been held to be no defense at law to a subscriber,¹⁴ although, if a misrepresentation of a material fact was made honestly without intention to deceive, the person making a charitable subscription in reliance thereon is justified in canceling the subscription.¹⁵

In accordance with the general rules it has been held that, if a false representation was made intentionally for the purpose of deceiving, the person making the charitable subscription in reliance thereon is justified in canceling the subscription,¹⁶ and if the execution of a contract to give a subscription is induced by a fraudulent representation of fact it is not binding on the subscriber; the fraud affords a defense.¹⁷ It is essential, however, that the fraud should relate to the subject matter of the contract.¹⁸ Statements by the beneficiary or payee before the subscriptions were made cannot be relied on as fraud when the subscribers themselves subsequently prepared the written subscriptions without incorporating such statement.¹⁹ Unauthorized statements by persons not parties to the contract cannot be the basis of fraud.²⁰

Misrepresentations as to other subscriptions. A fictitious subscription, made only for the purpose of inducing others to subscribe in good faith, renders subscriptions thus secured void,²¹ although the fictitious subscriber himself is estopped by his fraudulent representation to deny the validity of his own promise.²² Where one has agreed to subscribe on condition that the subscriptions total a certain amount, it is fraud to include in the total a subscription which plaintiff has agreed need not be paid²³ or a subscription made on terms different from that sought to be enforced.²⁴ Failure to disclose the fact that an apparently bona fide subscription is not so in fact is a fraud on subsequent subscribers.²⁵

Promissory representations. In accordance with the general rule, where a representation which induced the subscription is promissory in its nature, and not a statement of existing fact, it has been held that the contract cannot be avoided by the subscriber because of such misrepresentation.²⁶

Opinions. Since a mere representation of opinion, although erroneous, does not avoid contracts generally, a subscription contract is not affected by representations which are so loose and general,²⁷ or are so manifestly mere statements of opinion,²⁸ that the promise cannot be deemed to have relied on them as being statements of fact.

§ 9. Illegal and Ultra Vires Subscriptions

General rules relating to ultra vires contracts and the illegality of contracts, such as contracts contrary to public policy, have been applied to subscriptions.

General rules relating to ultra vires contracts and the illegality of contracts, such as contracts contrary to public policy, have been applied to subscriptions.²⁹ Thus, a subscription which has for its purpose the accomplishment of ends which are in contravention of public policy is invalid.³⁰ A contract whereby certain citizens of a town agreed to pay a specified sum to aid in the erection of a power plant, in order to increase the facilities for furnishing electric light to the town, is not illegal on its face.³¹ The legality of subscriptions made to public officers or to public corporations in aid of public works has been upheld where the object for which the subscription was made was within the powers of the beneficiary,³² and this is true of subscriptions to private corporations;³³ but a subscription to a private corporation for a purpose which is beyond the legal power of the corporation is invalid.³⁴ Where the funds have been expended on the project for which the money was subscribed, and all other subscribers have paid, defendant cannot raise the question of ultra vires.³⁵ Whether bonds issued by a city on the faith of subscriptions are issued ultra vires is a question not available to a subscriber.³⁶

§ 10. Construction

Although subscription contracts for public or quasi-public purposes are construed, where possible, to support a recovery, and doubtful questions are to be resolved against the subscriber, the rules of construction of contracts generally apply to the construction of subscription contracts.

Although, as a matter of public policy, subscription contracts for public or quasi-public purposes are construed, if reasonably possible, to support a recovery,³⁷ and doubtful questions are to be resolved against the subscriber,³⁸ the rules of construction of contracts generally apply to the construction of subscription contracts,³⁹ such as the rule that the contract will be construed, if possible, to carry out the intent of the parties,⁴⁰ the rule that the contract will be construed as a whole,⁴¹ and when clear and explicit it will be enforced according to its terms,⁴² and the rules of construction as to written and printed portions of a contract.⁴³

A subscription contract will be construed with respect to the intent of the parties at the time, and the court will consider the subject matter of the agreement, the inducement which influenced the subscription, the circumstances under which it was made, and the phraseology thereof,⁴⁴ and, in determining the meaning of particular words used in the subscription contract, the subject matter concerning which they were used and the circumstances calling for their application to the subject are to be considered.⁴⁵

Joint or several liability of subscriber. Where two or more persons sign a subscription paper, each promising to pay a stated sum, the liability of the subscribers is several and not joint,⁴⁶ but, if two or more persons sign a subscription paper without placing opposite their respective names the amounts of their subscriptions, the liability of the subscribers is joint and several,⁴⁷ and there are cases where the subscribers are found in fact to be joint principals

Amount and elements of recovery

(1) Where a subscription was conditioned on plaintiff's paying to a third person on his obligation an amount equal to the amount subscribed, plaintiff may recover from the subscriber only the amount actually paid on the obligation, with interest thereon, where the obligation was settled for a sum smaller than the amount subscribed.—Better Business Bureau of Detroit v. First Nat. Bank-Detroit, 296 N.W. 665, 296 Mich. 513.

(2) Where plaintiff recovered on subscription agreement, defendant was liable for interest and attorneys' fees, as provided in agreement, although he alleged inconsistencies between subscription agreement and another instrument, where he failed to show any damage because of alleged inconsistency.—Dorner v. Heffner, 58 P.2d 1308, 15 Cal.App.2d 97.

Success

Subscription to pay pro rata share of any deficit resulting from the operation of a summer opera season, which was to continue for a period of two or more weeks "according to the success of the enterprise," was properly construed to mean that continuation of the season was not to depend on financial success, since word "success" means attainment of a desired end, which may have no relation whatever to money or money profits.—Cincinnati Summer Opera Ass'n v. Williams, 16 N.E.2d 1000, 58 Ohio App. 513.

46. Cal.—George Herz & Co. v. Solt, 72 P.2d 251, 23 Cal.App.2d 178. 60 C.J. p 970 note 59.

Tex.—Wellington Railroad Committee v. Crawford, Com.App., 216 S.W. 151. 51 C.J. p 468 note 70.

(2) However, although subscription agreement contains promise for definite amount, subsequent provision of subscription contract in aid of railway construction for a bond to pay damages to abutting owners if relinquishments were not obtained was an indemnity contract on which the subscriber is jointly and severally liable primarily for the amount of his subscription, enforceable although not reduced to judgment.—Quannah, A. & P. acting through the payee as their agent for the purpose of carrying out the enterprise for which the subscription is made.⁴⁸ However, it has been held that, where a number of subscribers sign a subscription paper, each promising to pay the same amount, and other subscribers subsequently sign the same subscription paper and fail to indicate the amounts of their subscriptions, the liability of the last subscribers is several and not joint.⁴⁹

§ 11. Assignment

Under general rules as to the assignability of rights of one party to a contract, the contractual rights against the subscriber may be assignable.

Under general rules as to the assignability of rights of one party to a contract, the contractual right against the subscriber may be assignable.⁵⁰ The assignee has only the rights of his assignor⁵¹ and takes the subscription subject to all the equities existing between the original parties;⁵² and, where the first of two assignments is invalid, the second assignee obtains nothing from his assignor.⁵³ The assignment by the promisee of an unaccepted subscription conveys no rights to the assignee.⁵⁴ A statute creating a college and authorizing the trustees of a previously existing academy to assign to it all property which the academy had received authorizes and validates an otherwise good assignment.⁵⁵

necessary, a subscription may be assigned without any formal writing.⁵⁶ The borrowing of money by the subscribers' representatives for the completion of the project is an equitable assignment of the subscription to the lender.⁵⁷ It is no defense that the payee procured another to do the work which the payee agreed to do in return for the subscription where it was not a personal confidence reposed in the payee by the subscriber.⁵⁸

Subscription in aid of railroad. In accordance with the general rules, where a subscription or promise to contribute expressly runs to the designated railroad company and to its successors and assigns, the performance of the conditions of the subscription by another company to which the original grantee has assigned its franchises and property, including such subscription, will enable the successor company to enforce the promise in its own name,⁵⁹ unless the assignor company has failed or refused to accept or act on the contract;⁶⁰ and, even in the absence of such express terms, any railroad company performing the conditions of the subscription ordinarily is entitled to the benefit thereof,⁶¹ provided it derives its title thereto from the original company,⁶² unless it appears that the identity of the company to which a subscription is made is a material part of the agreement.⁶³ However, in the absence of such a provision, an independent company not showing title so derived cannot recover on such a contract unless the subscriber has consented to the change.⁶⁴

Payment of subscription by assignee
Payment by plaintiff to clearinghouse of amount assumed by defendant in subscription agreement, which court found clearinghouse accepted for assignment to plaintiff of its cause of action against defendant, was not a voluntary payment by plaintiff of defendant's subscription which extinguished the subscription and prevented clearinghouse from assigning anything to plaintiff.—Dorner v. Heffner, 58 P.2d 1308, 15 Cal.App. 2d 97.

Assumption of liabilities

Purported transfer of subscription without assumption of cross obligation by assignee does not authorize assignee's recovery against subscriber.—Candler v. Yaarab Temple Bldg. Co., 172 S.E. 63, 178 Ga. 63, answers conformed to 172 S.E. 344, 48 Ga.App. 163.

§ 12. Title to Funds Subscribed

The title to funds subscribed and paid on a subscription, or to property purchased with the funds, depends on the intention of the subscribers.

The title to funds subscribed and paid on a subscription, or to property purchased with the funds, depends on the intention of the subscribers.⁶⁵ It has been held that, where the subscribed funds have been paid to the committee which raised the subscription, the title to the funds did not thereby pass to the beneficiary.⁶⁶ If, however, the subscription list to which the subscribers' names are signed is headed, "Subscriptions and donations to" the beneficiary, and the money is received by its treasurer, title to the funds passes to the beneficiary.⁶⁷ One who has no title to funds subscribed cannot require their payment.⁶⁸

Subscription in aid of railroad. The members of a committee of subscribers to a fund in aid of a railroad, authorized to hold and disburse the subscription fund, are not, as to their cosubscribers, trustees of such fund so as to require them to account as such for its disposition or disbursement,⁶⁹ but where they expend the fund in violation of the conditions on which it was subscribed they are liable to stockholders for the amount so expended.⁷⁰

Eilers, supra.

Pledge or donation payable after death

- (1) Pledge or donation payable after donor's death as a matter of necessary public policy and of implied intention and understanding between parties was held subject to implied condition that it would not be paid until debts of donor's estate were satisfied, although debts were incurred after pledge or donation.—In re Luce's Estate, 291 N.W. 562, 137 Neb. 846.

(2) Payment of claims against insolvent's estate see Executors and Administrators § 685.

Conditions held complied with

(1) Under contract whereby deceased pledged twenty-five thousand dollars to church in consideration of trustees' agreeing to erect new building for not less than two hundred thousand dollars, and in consideration of subscriptions of members, pledge was held binding obligation payable when contract for new church was signed, although less than two hundred thousand dollars was subscribed.—Ex parte Walker's Ex'r, 68 S.W.2d 745, 253 Ky. 111.

(2) Where subscribers to industrial credit fund agreement agreed to pay to trustee assessments based on participation certificates issued pursuant to loans which were to be approved by seven of board of industrial fund directors, vote of president of lending bank which was subscriber and which became insolvent was held properly counted as one of seven votes required for approval of loan, so as to bind other subscribers on their participation certificates, where under agreement seven impartial votes were not required.—Faulkner v. Lowell Trust Co., 189 N.E. 215, 285 Mass. 375.

(3) Other conditions see 60 C.J. p 963 note 59 [b].

Conditions held not performed

(1) Where a charitable institution solicited subscriptions for the erection of a memorial building, which was described in literature distributed as a new three-story brick structure, and subscriber contracted to pay the school a fixed amount when "construction of the building is begun," the institution did not perform the contract by repairing an old wooden structure and naming it the memorial building.—In re Carson's Estate, 37 A.2d 488, 349 Pa. 529.

Endowers could not complain that hospital was not conducted exclusively as homeopathic where rooms endowed were restricted to giving homeopathic treatment.—Hoffstot v. Fifth Ave. Hospital of City of New York, 249 N.Y.S. 399, 140 Misc. 206, affirmed 257 N.Y.S. 1034, 236 App.Div. 667, affirmed 188 N.E. 28, 262 N.Y. 479.

scription is made to a project on condition that the building be located at a certain place, with a stipulation as to the value of the building, the location, and not the value, is the condition on compliance with which the subscription becomes binding.⁷³ A condition that a building be erected does not require that it be completed.⁷⁴ Where the original agreement was made on certain conditions, and afterward a substitute agreement without conditions was made, the conditions of the original subscription do not pass to the substitute subscription.⁷⁵ The possible or probable failure of performance of a condition subsequent is no bar to the recovery of the sum subscribed.⁷⁶

Substantial performance. Recovery is allowed where there has been a substantial, although not literal, performance of the conditions;⁷⁷ but the doctrine of substantial performance has no application where the charitable institution deliberately departs from the contract and attempts to substitute another type of performance.⁷⁸

Performance of collateral agreements. The performance of a collateral and contemporaneous promise is not a condition precedent to recovery on the subscription.⁷⁹

Payment from specified fund. General rules as to contracts limiting payment of an obligation to a particular fund have been applied to conditional subscriptions payable out of a particular fund.⁸⁰ Thus, in such an instance, the existence or sufficiency of the particular fund is a condition precedent to the liability,⁸¹ subject, of course, to the qualification that a dereliction in duty of the subscriber with respect thereto cannot be permitted to defeat its creation or sufficiency.⁸²

b. Subscriptions in Aid of Railroads

In order to be entitled to the benefit of a subscription in aid of a railroad, the railroad must comply, at least substantially, with the conditions attached to the subscription, including conditions as to construction and operation, or location of the road, termini, and stations.

A railroad company becomes entitled to the money or other aid subscribed after acceptance of the contract when, acting in good faith,⁸³ it has performed or at least substantially performed all the conditions precedent prescribed therein,⁸⁴ unless the performance of such conditions has been waived.⁸⁵ On the fulfillment by the railroad company of all conditions attached to such a subscription, the liability of the subscriber or promisor becomes complete,⁸⁶ and he cannot thereafter withdraw his subscription or repudiate his promise;⁸⁷ and, where a railroad company, in reliance on a subscription, has fulfilled the conditions thereof, the subscribers cannot be heard to say that the company had no power to accept or to become a party to the subscription agreement.⁸⁸ If, however, the company fails to comply with such conditions, or otherwise breaks the subscription contract, it cannot hold the subscribers liable thereon,⁸⁹ even though they have derived some benefit from the road as constructed or the work done;⁹⁰ and in case of such failure or breach a subscriber may withdraw his promise,⁹¹ and may either treat the contract as terminated and sue for damages for its breach,⁹² or treat it as rescinded and recover back money or property which he has advanced, as discussed infra § 21.

Where the contract of each subscriber is separate and distinct from the contracts of other subscribers, even though on the same paper,⁹³ a condition annexed to one subscriber's signature is in no way affected by the fact that other subscribers annex different conditions to their signatures.⁹⁴

Construction, maintenance, and equipment of railroad. A subscription in aid of a railroad may validly be made conditional on the completion and operation of the road.⁹⁵ Furthermore, it has been held that a subscription or promise to contribute in aid of a proposed railroad ordinarily is deemed to be subject to the implied condition that the road shall be constructed and operated,⁹⁶ unless the contrary appears from the terms of the subscription.⁹⁷

In order to be entitled to the benefit of such subscription a company must comply substantially with all the conditions thereof relative to the construction, maintenance, and equipment of the road.⁹⁸ A condition that the road shall be "completed" does not require that the road shall be in complete running order and completely equipped for receiving, carrying, and discharging passengers and freight, but it is sufficient if the road be so far completed as to allow trains to be operated thereon;⁹⁹ and a condition that the road shall be completed and put in operation is complied with when it is so far completed that it is used and operated for the transportation of persons and property,¹ even though the company does not own the rolling stock used in such operation.² However, a condition requiring the construction of a railroad is not complied with by operating over the line of another railroad company under a lease³ or running agreement.⁴

A condition that the road shall be equipped means that it shall have thereon the necessary engines, cars, and other appliances for its ordinary use;⁵ and a condition that it shall be running requires more than the passage of one train over the road, where it is in an unfinished state.⁶

Location of road, termini, and stations. A subscription or promise may validly be made conditional on the construction of a railroad to a specified place or along a specified route,⁷ or the location of a station at a specified point.⁸ The railroad company is entitled to the benefit of such a subscription only on complying at least substantially with all of the conditions thereof relative to the location of the railroad⁹ and its termini¹⁰ and stations;¹¹ and, where a railroad company in consideration of gifts or contributions has engaged to lay out its road in a specified place, it will not be allowed to change the line of its road or do by indirection what is equivalent thereto without compensation to the contributors.¹²

A condition that a station shall be established requires a station building with the usual and necessary facilities and equipment for the convenience of passengers and the reception of freight,¹³ and is not complied with by erecting a building without such facilities and without a ticket office, and at which trains do not stop except on signal.¹⁴ Where the condition is that a station shall be built within a specified distance of a designated point, such distance, unless otherwise provided by the terms of the subscription, is to be measured in a straight line¹⁵ rather than along the traveled route.¹⁶ Under a subscription contract expressly permitting the location of a station to be selected by the company, a subscriber cannot refuse payment on the ground that at the time he signed the contract it was the intention to establish the station at a place more advantageous to him.¹⁷

§ 14. — Time of Performance

Where time of performance is of the essence of the subscription contract, a noncompliance with this requirement is a defense to the subscriber. Generally, time of performance is of the essence of a subscription in aid of a railroad.

According to the weight of authority the time of performance, when prescribed by the subscription contract, is of the essence of the contract, and a noncompliance with this requirement is a defense to the subscriber,¹⁸ although performance was completed shortly after the time stipulated.¹⁹ However, where time is not of the essence of the contract, a failure to complete the project within a specified time does not release the subscriber from liability.²⁰ If no time for performance is prescribed, then performance must be within a reasonable time,²¹ but in such a case time is not of the essence and a mere lapse of time will not avoid the subscription or forfeit rights under it,²² and a subscriber wishing to rescind for delay must give notice of his intention to do so and allow a reasonable time.²³

A stipulation extending the time for performance does not waive a requirement that the project be completed before the subscriber becomes liable.²⁴ Delay caused by failure of the subscribers to pay their subscriptions is no defense.²⁵ Furthermore, where the subscription agreement is unconditional, it has been held that the completion of the project within a reasonable time is not essential to a recovery.²⁶ A subscriber's requests, over a period of years, for extensions of time within which to pay his subscription have been held to waive any delay in performance.²⁷

A subscription or promise to contribute to a railroad company may be conditioned on the construction of a railroad to a specified place or along a specified route within a specified time,²⁸ and, in such a case according to the weight of authority, the time of performance is of the essence of the contract, and a noncompliance with this requirement is a defense to the subscription.²⁹ Thus, the railroad company, in order to be entitled to the benefit of a subscription, must comply with the condition that within a specified time, or on or before a specified date, the road shall be made ready for the operation of trains,³⁰ be built and equipped,³¹ or be completed and in operation,³² or that it shall be constructed to a certain place or between certain places,³³ or a train of cars be run between specified points.³⁴

§ 15. — Change of Plan or Purpose

Any material change in the plan or purpose for which the subscription was made cannot be effected without the consent of the subscriber, and, if such a change is made without his consent, he is thereby released in the absence of a waiver or an estoppel to deny his consent to the change.

Any material change in the plan or purpose for which the subscription was made cannot be effected without the consent of the subscriber,³⁵ and, if such a change is made without his consent, he is thereby released unless there has been a waiver³⁶ or unless he has estopped himself to deny his consent to the change.³⁷ However, a change in matters which were in no way an inducement to defendant's subscription³⁸ or a change of plans to carry out the purpose for which the money was subscribed³⁹ does not affect the liability of the subscriber.

§ 16. — Abandonment of Undertaking

There can be no recovery against the subscriber if the enterprise is abandoned before the accomplishment of the purpose contemplated by the subscription paper. Generally, money may not be diverted from the purpose for which it was subscribed.

If the enterprise is abandoned before the accomplishment of the purpose contemplated by the subscription paper, no recovery can be had against the subscriber,⁴⁰ since the law implies a condition that the enterprise shall not be abandoned,⁴¹ and that the enterprise must exist when payment is demanded.⁴² Thus, an abandonment of the enterprise after the payee or beneficiary has sued and obtained a judgment against the subscriber, but before enforcement of the judgment, entitled the subscriber to relief.⁴³

A total abandonment or frustration of the project is necessary to relieve the subscriber from liability,⁴⁴ and, where the project is partially completed, a cessation of work, because of the shortage of funds due to the failure of pledgors to pay the full amount of their pledges, is not a total abandonment relieving the subscriber from liability,⁴⁵ and, if the purpose which is fairly to be deemed the object of the subscription is substantially accomplished, a subsequent cessation of the enterprise ordinarily will not relieve the subscriber from liability,⁴⁶ and a temporary suspension of the project during a period of financial difficulties is not an abandonment.⁴⁷

Where the subscriptions are insufficient to carry out the purpose, a proposed consolidation of associations for the accomplishment of such purpose is authorized as being in conformity with the primary object of the subscribers,⁴⁸ and, even if inactivity for a long period of time worked a forfeiture, the original association or its successor alone had the right to object to such a plan as the funds collected became the property of the association.⁴⁹

Diversion or misapplication of funds. It has been stated that there is an implied condition that money shall not be diverted from the purpose for which it was subscribed,⁵¹ and it has been held that, where money is solicited, donated, and received as a fund for a particular purpose, the donee of the fund is without authority to apply the fund to any other purpose,⁵² although it has been held that, where money has been subscribed for a specified purpose and the subscriber's liability has become fixed, a subsequent misapplication of the funds will not release him.⁵³ Where money is contributed for the construction of a building for specified purposes, there is no diversion of funds where, although the building is not completed, the basement thereof is used for the purposes specified.⁵⁴

§ 17. — Subscription Conditioned on Other Subscriptions

Where a subscription is conditioned on other subscriptions, a compliance with the conditions binds the subscriber.

A subscription conditioned on other subscriptions to a certain amount requires that they shall be valid subscriptions,⁵⁵ and to the amount designated,⁵⁶ on the same terms as that sued on,⁵⁷ although the others need not be exact counterparts;⁵⁸ and, where the conditions are complied with, the subscriber is bound.⁵⁹ A condition that other subscriptions to a certain amount must be subscribed and well secured is satisfied by subscriptions to that amount by responsible persons.⁶⁰ The condition "well secured" does not require a surety.⁶¹ It is essential that there should be no conditions as to the liability of any of the subscribers not applicable to all,⁶² except where there is consent to a variation of conditions as to some of the subscribers.⁶³ Where the subscription proper does not show that it is conditioned on the obtaining of other equal subscriptions, such a condition cannot be relied on to avoid payment.⁶⁴

Subscription for double purpose

Where subscription was conditioned on necessary funds being raised to pay college's indebtedness and additional pledges were made for double purpose of paying debts and building a dormitory, the fact that sufficient funds were raised to pay all indebtedness, had the funds been so applied rather than using portion thereof for building dormitory, and that all indebtedness was not paid until some time later, did not relieve subscriber of its obligation, since creditors gained, rather than lost, through increased subscriptions from inclusion of additional purpose, and carrying out that purpose was not a diversion of funds.—Colorado Woman's College v. 64. N.Y.—Locke v. Taylor, 146 N.Y.S. 256, 161 App.Div. 44.

Where the subscriber's liability has become fixed, general rules apply as to payment.⁶⁵ Thus, payment must be made on the date prescribed, if one is stated in the subscription,⁶⁶ or at once, if payable on demand,⁶⁷ and it is no excuse that, if the money is paid, it may be misapplied.⁶⁸ Payment may be made directly to the person to whom the nominal payee was bound to turn over the money.⁶⁹ A devise for a specific purpose does not satisfy a balance due on the subscriber's death on a subscription for a different object.⁷⁰

Where the promise is to pay as the work progresses, the work need not be completed before payment is due.⁷¹ It is no ground for refusal to pay that another subscriber was allowed to deduct his subscription from the purchase price of land sold by him to the beneficiary in furtherance of the purpose for which the subscriptions were made.⁷²

Demand. An action on a subscription will lie without first making a demand for payment,⁷³ in the absence of anything in the contract requiring it,⁷⁴ and no demand need be made where the time and place of payment are specified in the contract.⁷⁵ Under a statute requiring a demand before entering suit, the subscription must be due and payable at the time of the demand, and if not yet due the demand is insufficient.⁷⁶

Interest can be charged on a subscription only for the time elapsing after payment has become due,⁷⁷ but it cannot be allowed against a delinquent subscriber in the absence of proof showing when the beneficiary expended money in carrying out the project.⁷⁸

Abatement of subscriptions. If less than the amount subscribed is expended on the undertaking, each subscriber is liable only for his pro rata share of the total sum expended.⁷⁹

§ 19. Revocation and Lapse

In the absence of consent by the obligee or of provisions in the subscription agreement, the subscription may be revoked on notice by the subscriber only before it is accepted, and before a consideration is furnished. A subscription lapses by the death or insanity of the subscriber if such an event occurs before there is an acceptance and before a consideration is furnished.

The subscription may be revoked on notice⁸⁰ by the subscriber, if the subscription has not yet been accepted and no consideration has been furnished therefor,⁸¹ but not after there has been an acceptance and a consideration furnished,⁸² unless by consent of the obligee,⁸³ or cancellation or change is permitted by the terms of the instrument.⁸⁴ A subscriber may be estopped to claim revocation.⁸⁵

Death or insanity of subscriber. A subscription lapses by the death of the subscriber, if that event occurs before there is an acceptance and before a consideration is furnished,⁸⁶ but not if it occurs thereafter,⁸⁷ nor after a promissory estoppel has arisen,⁸⁸ the rule of revocation by death being applicable only where decedent himself might, if living, have revoked the subscription.⁸⁹ The lapse of the subscription by the subsequent insanity of the subscriber is controlled by the same rules that govern the lapse of the subscription by death.⁹⁰

Subscription in aid of railroad. General rules as to the revocation of a subscription have been applied to a subscription in aid of a railroad.⁹¹ Furthermore, under a contract to raise a bonus for railroad construction, authorizing trustees to contract in the name of the subscribers with the railroad, it has been held that the attempt of a signer of the contract to withdraw the sum subscribed by him does not constitute a revocation of the power of the trustees to contract,⁹² as the power of the trustees under such a contract, when it is accepted by the railroad, is not a naked power revocable at the subscriber's pleasure.⁹³

§ 20. Release or Discharge of Subscriber

Various acts or claims have been considered by the courts and held not to release or discharge a subscriber from his obligation.

Although the subscriber is released from, or is not bound by, his obligation if the conditions of the subscription have not been fulfilled by the other party, as discussed supra §§ 13-17, various acts or claims have been held not to release or discharge a subscriber from his obligation.⁹⁴ He is not discharged simply because he ceases to benefit by the enterprise for which he has incurred the obligation,⁹⁵ or because of the fact that the beneficiary requires that the subscriptions be guaranteed, which is done,⁹⁶ or because the beneficiary releases the guarantor,⁹⁷ or because an extension of time was given to another subscriber who subsequently paid.⁹⁸ An increase in a specified total after securing defendant's subscription does not release him where the additional amount is covered by further subscriptions.⁹⁹ A substitution of a new agency for carrying out the purpose for which the subscription was made to the old agency does not release the subscriber.¹ Where the contract requires a meeting of all subscribers to make arrangements for carrying out the project, in order to charge the subscribers, one who offers to pay after such meeting is held waives his right to object that he was released because given no notice of the meeting.² Subscribers are not released because money was borrowed to complete the project before the subscribers were called on to pay their subscriptions.³ Where the contract provides for certain yearly payments, the subscriber is not released from liability for payments due during two years because of failure to enforce the first year's payment.⁴

Requests for extension of time to pay subscription were held to have estopped subscriber and estate from claiming revocation.—Rouff v. Washington & Lee University, Tex.Civ. App., 48 S.W.2d 483, error refused.

Where the subscription agreement is one of mutual subscriptions for a common object whereby the promise of the others is a sufficient consideration for the promises of each subscriber, as discussed supra, § 5, there can be no release or discharge of any subscriber without the consent of all the others,⁵ and the promisee itself has no authority to release the subscriber without the consent of the other subscribers.⁶

Subscription in aid of railroad. An agreement to release subscribers if public aid shall be voted by a municipality is ineffectual, although such aid is in fact voted, where the municipality is without legal authority to grant such aid.⁷

§ 21. Recovery Back of Subscriptions

A paid subscription may be recovered back on abandonment of the enterprise, or where the agreement expressly provides for recovery, or if the condition on which it was paid has not been fulfilled, or if the subscription was fraudulently procured.

A paid subscription may be recovered back if such recovery be expressly provided for,⁸ if the condition on which it was paid has not been fulfilled,⁹ or if the subscription was fraudulently procured.¹⁰ Subscriptions paid may be recovered back on abandonment of the enterprise.¹¹ Where the subscriptions are to a permanent fund of an association, the fund subscribed is a trust fund so that it cannot be returned by a majority vote of the members of the association.¹² Where the sums subscribed are gifts, they cannot be recovered.¹³

Subscription in aid of railroad. Where a railroad abandons the enterprise for which money was subscribed, the subscriber may recover it back, even though there was no express provision in the contract to that effect.¹⁴ A subscription in aid of a railroad may be recovered back where there is a failure of complete performance by the railroad,¹⁵ unless an excuse for the failure is shown or that the part performance was beneficial;¹⁶ but recovery has been denied where there has not been a total failure of consideration.¹⁷ Under some statutes, where a railroad is abandoned and no reasonable provision is made for traffic between the points affected by the abandonment, persons who have contributed to its construction are entitled to have their contributions refunded, with interest,¹⁸ or, if rights of way have been granted in payment of the subscriptions, to have a reconveyance thereof,¹⁹ unless they waive their rights by failing to make proof of their claims.²⁰ Under a statute permitting a railroad to change or remove its line and requiring that it return all property or money given for the building of the line, it must be established that money sought to be recovered was paid to the company which built the line and that it was paid and received exclusively

Subscription to aid foreign government

(1) Where a subscription fund was raised to aid foreign government in its fight for independence, and money

§ 22. Actions

- a. In general
- b. Parties
- c. Pleading
- d. Evidence
- e. Trial

a. In General

An action at law is a proper remedy against a subscriber whose contract is several in nature, but where the subscribers to a fund are numerous equity may have jurisdiction to administer relief in a suit to enforce the subscriptions.

An action at law is a proper remedy against a subscriber whose contract is several in its nature,²² but where the subscribers to a fund are numerous, many of whom deny liability on various grounds, equity has jurisdiction to administer relief in a suit to enforce the subscriptions.²³ Where the subscriber's promise is to convey real estate, the proper remedy for failure to convey is an action for damages for breach of contract.²⁴ A subscription paper to which defendant's name was added with his consent has been held a contract in writing, within a statute of limitations governing actions on written contracts.²⁵

Defenses. Where the subscriber claimed inconsistencies between the subscription agreement and another instrument, but failed to show that he suffered any damage, the alleged inconsistencies were no defense to the action on the subscription agreement.²⁶

General rules as to parties in civil actions apply as to parties plaintiff and parties defendant in an action on the subscription.

An action on the subscription is properly brought by the other party to the subscription contract.²⁷ General rules apply as to parties plaintiff in an action on the subscription,²⁸ including the rule, existing in some jurisdictions, that the action must be brought by the real party in interest,²⁹ and that the

Where citizens of a town agreed to make certain payments and do certain things in consideration of construction and operation of a railroad, and executed notes to railroad conditioned on completion of track, within certain time, railroad contractors to whom notes had been transferred could not, on failure to complete road within required time, recover on notes, notwithstanding citizens' breach of contract making performance within required time impossible, where contractor, despite breach, treated contract as in force, since contractors, on breach, had right either to ignore breach and claim rights under contract or treat contract as at an end and sue for breach.—Wellington Railroad Committee v. Corporations

Where the subscription runs to a contemplated corporation, the corporation may sue if, when it is formed, it accepts the subscription and furnishes the consideration, or is the contemplated beneficiary in a jurisdiction where the beneficiary is permitted to sue.—Tioga County General Hospital v. Tidd, 298 N.Y.S. 460, 164 Misc. 273—60 C.J. p 970 note 58.

Subscriptions in aid of railroads

(1) Where particular individuals guarantee the payment of subscriptions made by others in aid of a railroad company, the company may enforce such subscriptions against the subscribers.

(2) However, where certain persons assume the payment of the specified amount to the company and procure subscriptions from others for the purpose of raising money to make such payment, such subscribers are not liable to the company and the persons assuming payment can alone be sued on the contract.—Lamolle Valley R. Co. v. Marsh, supra.

Real party in interest

(1) Where decedent pledged seventy-five thousand dollars to church organizations for purpose of building a chapel as part of student work in France and claimant was organized to carry on work performed by church center and carried on such work and decedent knew of incorporation and succession and made no objection but tacitly acquiesced, and her contributions were made to claimant, claimant was real party in interest and entitled to maintain action to recover balance of pledge.—In re De Brabant's Estate, 95 N.Y.S. 2d 324, 197 Misc. 923.

party bringing the action on the subscription must have such an interest that the subscriber will be protected from the assertion of further claims on the same cause of action.³⁰ The assignee of a subscription right is the proper party plaintiff in those jurisdictions where the action must be brought by the real party in interest;³¹ and, where suit is brought by the assignee who is the real party in interest, the fact that it should have been brought in a different name is no objection where a statute allows recovery on principles of equity.³²

A beneficiary who is not a party to the contract may sue a delinquent subscriber in those jurisdictions where a third person is allowed to sue on a contract made for his benefit;³³ but in those cases where the only consideration is to be found in the mutual promises of the subscribers, and the jurisdiction is one in which a beneficiary who is not a party to the contract cannot sue on the contract, such subscribers, and not the beneficiary, are the only proper parties plaintiff.³⁴ Although the mere fact that the subscription was made payable to the trustees, who conducted the business affairs of the corporation before and after it ceased to operate, does not preclude the corporation from prosecuting

the action in its corporate name,³⁵ where the subscription calls for payment to designated persons the action on the subscription may be brought by them, as, for example, where the paper provides for payment to a committee,³⁶ to a trustee,³⁷ or to a treasurer,³⁸ and, if the commissioners of a county are designated, a suit by the county treasurer is not proper.³⁹

Under a statute providing that, on questions of common interest to many persons, a suit may be prosecuted or defended by one or more for the benefit of the whole, a part of the subscribers to a fund may sue a delinquent subscriber for the amount promised by him.⁴⁰ Where suit may be brought by a person in whose name a contract for the benefit of a third person is made, without joining the beneficiary, a county officer may sue in his own name on a subscription payable to him for the benefit of the county.⁴¹ Under a statute providing that all suits by or against a township in its corporate capacity shall be brought in the name of such township, a subscription contract really made to the township must be sued on in the name of the township, although the paper promises to pay to the highway commissioner.⁴² Where the subscription is to a county for a county building in a certain city, the city, not being a party to, and having no legal interest in, the contract, cannot sue thereon.⁴³

Rules as to the parties defendant in action on contracts generally apply to actions on subscriptions.⁴⁴ Thus, where two or more persons sign a subscription paper, each promising to pay a stated sum, and the liability of the subscribers is several and not joint, as discussed supra § 10, they must be sued severally on their undertakings.⁴⁵ However, since there are cases where the subscribers are found in fact to be joint principals acting through the payee as their agent for the purpose of carrying out the enterprise for which the subscription is made, as discussed supra § 10, as a consequence in such cases the subscribers must be sued jointly.⁴⁶ It has been held, however, that if one is sued alone he can avail himself only of the nonjoinder of his cosubscribers by plea in abatement.⁴⁷

General rules governing pleadings in civil actions are applicable to pleadings in actions on subscriptions.

Under rules of general application the declaration, petition, or complaint in an action on a subscription contract must state all facts necessary to constitute a cause of action.⁴⁸ It should allege the purposes of the subscription and that they have been complied with,⁴⁹ and that the money sought is sought in furtherance of the purpose for which it was promised;⁵⁰ but, in jurisdictions where a written contract of subscription imports a consideration, the complaint in an action to recover a subscription need not allege a consideration;⁵¹ and, where the consideration for each subscription is the other subscriptions, the complaint need not allege the completion of the work for which it was taken,⁵² and such allegation, if made, may be treated as surplusage.⁵³

If by the terms of the subscription contract the subscriber's liability is mainly to pay a pro rata share of any excess of expenses above receipts of an enterprise to be undertaken, a complaint in an action to recover on such subscription must show the total amount subscribed and the amount of the loss.⁵⁴ Where the subscription is due, it is not necessary to allege a demand.⁵⁵ Notice of performance by plaintiff need not be alleged in the complaint where it is clear from the agreement that defendant's performance was to precede plaintiff's performance.⁵⁶ The complaint must show a recoverable interest in the subscription in plaintiffs,⁵⁷ and a corporation afterward formed should allege sufficient facts to show that it accepted the obligations of the promoters.⁵⁸ If a promise to a committee is sued on by a corporation formed after the subscription, and claiming that by operation of law

(1) A contract, whereby citizens of a town agreed to make certain payments to, and do certain things for, railroad company on completion and operation of railroad, being an entire contract, a railroad contractor suing on the citizens' notes could not recover without alleging performance of the contract.—Wellington Railroad Committee v. Crawford, Tex. Civ.App., 216 S.W. 151.

(2) In an action on notes given by subscribers to a bonus to a railroad company and made conditional on completion of road by certain date, railroad contractor to whom notes had been transferred suing on notes notwithstanding failure to complete road within required time could not avoid such condition on ground of breach of contract by the citizens making such completion impossible without pleading such breach.—Wellington Railroad Committee v. Crawford, supra.

(3) Where parties are bound, "in the event a railroad is built to M. with a possible Northern connection," to give a stated amount, a declaration in an action thereon which does not allege that the railroad has been built to M, with a possible Northern connection, does not state a cause of action.—Messer v. Dekle, 54 So. 366, 61 Fla. 333.

the rights of the committee vested in the corporation, the petition should allege the facts from which this can be shown.⁵⁹

A complaint to recover back a subscription for failure to perform is bad where by its allegations it shows performance.⁶⁰

Plea, answer, and reply. General rules are applicable to defendant's pleadings.⁶¹ Thus a defense that the receipt of a subscription donation was ultra vires must be pleaded,⁶² and an allegation in the answer that some of the subscribers had settled at less than face value is insufficient to state a defense, in the absence of an allegation that subscriptions on which settlement was made could have been collected in full.⁶³ A plea or answer setting up fraudulent misrepresentations as a defense must allege by whom and by what authority they were made⁶⁴ and that they were relied on.⁶⁵ Where the contract is such that plaintiff need not allege consideration, defendant must allege want of consideration if he seeks to rely on it as a defense.⁶⁶

Where the answer sets up want of consideration, no reply is necessary under a statute providing that there shall be no reply except in cases where matter in confession and avoidance is relied on.⁶⁷ Where defendant in his answer alleges payment, and plaintiff's response fails to deny payment, defendant is entitled to judgment on the pleadings.⁶⁸

Issues, proof, and variance. As in civil actions generally, all material allegations properly put in issue by the pleadings in actions on subscriptions must be proved.⁶⁹ Only such evidence as tends to prove matters put in issue by the pleadings is admissible.⁷⁰ As in other civil actions, there must be no material variance between the pleadings and the proof.⁷¹ Where the petition alleges a promise to a corporation and the contract proved is a promise to a committee, there is a variance.⁷² A plea of fraud in procuring the execution of a subscription cannot be sustained by proof of fraud with respect to the consideration.⁷³ The admission in evidence of the paper with all the names thereon is not a variance, although only defendant's name is mentioned in the declaration.⁷⁴

sideration arises where the subscription is under seal,⁷⁶ or where the promise assumes the form of a promissory note,⁷⁷ or where the subscription paper recites that the promise is given for "value received"⁷⁸ or that it was made in consideration of subscriptions of others.⁷⁹ A statute providing that all contracts in writing shall import a consideration applies to subscription contracts.⁸⁰ Where money is subscribed on condition that other subscriptions aggregating a certain sum are obtained, and subsequent subscribers know of the former subscription, it will be presumed that their subscriptions are made in reliance on the earlier subscription, although it is an instrument complete in itself and separate from the other subscription.⁸¹

The burden is on plaintiff to prove every fact material to his cause of action,⁸² as that the subscription has matured⁸³ or that conditions in the agreement have been complied with;⁸⁴ and, where there is nothing in the contract to show that it was based on valuable consideration, plaintiff has the burden of proving consideration.⁸⁵

want of consideration,⁸⁷ or that a contract reciting consideration is in fact bad for want of consideration,⁸⁸ or that misrepresentations induced the subscription,⁸⁹ or that the subscription was obtained through coercion and duress.⁹⁰ In an action to recover a subscription given on condition that a certain amount be subscribed, which was done, the burden is on defendant to show that any of the subscriptions were invalid.⁹¹ If the contract provides that any surplus of subscription over the price for erecting the plant should belong to the subscribers, the burden is on a delinquent subscriber to show that there was a surplus.⁹²

bility is inadmissible.⁹⁵ On the question of consideration, it is competent to show that money had been raised and work done in reliance on the subscriptions, and the exclusion thereof is error.⁹⁶ Evidence of publications of defendant's subscription with his consent for the purpose of inducing others to subscribe is admissible, even though defendant was not present when they were made.⁹⁷ Plaintiff may introduce any competent evidence to show an admission by defendant of his promise to contribute⁹⁸ and to show the amount for which defendant is liable.⁹⁹ Where defendant claims a parol inducement to subscribe, plaintiff may introduce evidence that the person offering the inducement was not his agent.¹

On the part of defendant any competent evidence is admissible to show fraud in the procurement of the subscription,² to show the conditions on which the contract was made,³ or to show abandonment of the enterprise.⁴

(3) Weight and Sufficiency

General rules applicable to civil actions govern as to the weight and sufficiency of evidence in actions on subscriptions.

General rules applicable to civil actions govern as to the weight and sufficiency of evidence in actions on subscriptions.⁵ Thus, in an action on a subscription, plaintiff must, where proof of consideration is necessary, establish it by a preponderance of the evidence,⁶ and must likewise establish delivery⁷ and acceptance according to the terms of the subscription.⁸ Circumstantial evidence is or may be sufficient to show reliance on defendant's promise by plaintiff.⁹

Defendant must establish by a preponderance of the evidence any matters of defense which he alleges.¹⁰ Thus, where he seeks to defend on the ground that the contract was never delivered to the proper person, he must prove nondelivery by a preponderance of evidence,¹¹ and this is also true where he seeks to rely on abandonment of the enterprise¹² or want of consideration.¹³ If defendant's evidence is insufficient to defeat recovery of a subscription, it is insufficient to warrant recovery, by way of counterclaim, of payments which he has made.¹⁴

e. Trial

General rules apply as to trial in actions on subscriptions.

General rules apply as to trial in actions on subscriptions.¹⁵ Thus, where the evidence is conflicting, questions of fact are for the jury,¹⁶ such as whether defendant orally subscribed to a fund,¹⁷ whether the subscriber had the mental capacity to make the subscription,¹⁸ whether a subscription was secured through fraud,¹⁹ whether the contract sued on was supported by consideration,²⁰ or whether a campaign committee having power to solicit subscriptions had power to accept them.²¹ Likewise, on conflicting evidence the question of performance or nonperformance of conditions is for the jury.²²

Since a reasonable time for performance is allowed where no time is specified in the contract, what is a reasonable time for performance is for the jury to determine.²³ Where they are supported by evidence, the court will not reverse findings that the subscription was delivered conditionally²⁴ or that defendant never authorized the signing of his name to the subscription.²⁵ A verdict for plaintiff will not be disturbed where supported by the evidence.²⁶

Where the evidence is such that but one conclusion can be drawn therefrom, the question of plaintiff's reliance on defendant's contract should not be submitted to the jury.²⁷ Where no issue of fact is raised as to the validity and enforceability of the subscription, it is proper to direct a verdict for plaintiff.²⁸ Where the proof shows, without dispute, a want of consideration, a directed verdict for defendant is proper.²⁹

visions;²⁷ livelihood,²⁸ as, a meager subsistence.²⁹

It has been said that a house in which to live may reasonably come within the meaning of subsistence.³⁰

"Subsistence" has been held synonymous with "support."³¹

SUBSTANCE. The word "substance" is derived from the Latin sub stare, meaning to stand under,³² and, while the term is susceptible of different significations according to the circumstances,³³ as its etymology indicates, substance is that which stands under and supports all phenomena, whether material or mental;³⁴ the substratum.³⁵ Substance is the essence³⁶ of the thing itself;³⁷ that which makes a thing what it is, or gives it its essential nature.³⁸

The term "substance" is frequently employed to signify that which is essential;³⁹ and in this sense is defined as meaning the characteristic and essential components⁴⁰ of anything;⁴¹ the most important element⁴² in any existence;⁴³ the main part;⁴⁴ the essential part;⁴⁵ the essential or material part;⁴⁶ the main or material part;⁴⁷ that in and for which a thing chiefly exists.⁴⁸

The word is sometimes used to indicate the meaning⁴⁹ expressed by any speech or writing;⁵⁰ essential import;⁵¹ purport;⁵² and it may refer to an abstract or compendium.⁵³

"Substance" has various other connotations, and it may also denote body, matter, or the material of which a thing is made;⁵⁴ and in connection with this meaning it has been said that all substances are divided into three general classes; Animal, vegetable, and mineral.⁵⁵

The word "substance" is further defined as meaning that which receives modifications.⁵⁶

"Substance" has been held synonymous with "subject" and the words have also been distinguished see ante p 554 notes 64, 65. It is sometimes used in contradistinction to "letter" see 52 C.J.S. p 1054 note 98, and is usually contrasted with, or employed as the antithesis of, "form," but not always so, see 37 C.J.S. p 113 notes 43, 44. "Substance" has also been distinguished from "tenor."⁵⁷

Phrases employing the term are set out in the note.⁵⁸

SUBSTANTIAL. While the word "substantial" is occasionally employed as a noun, and as such is defined as meaning that which is of essential value or worth,⁵⁹ it is more frequently employed as an adjective, and it is as an adjective that the term is treated in the following paragraphs.

The word "substantial" is a relative,⁶⁰ and not an exact,⁶¹ term. It has been said to be as illusive a word as the English language contains,⁶² and is of varied meaning,⁶³ and is susceptible of different meanings according to the circumstances⁶⁴ of its use,⁶⁵ and in considering the word it must be examined in its relation to the context,⁶⁶ and its meaning is to be gauged by all the circumstances surrounding the transaction with respect to which it has been used.⁶⁷

The term has reference to something worthwhile as distinguished from something without value or merely nominal,⁶⁸ and it imports a considerable amount of value in opposition to that which is inconsequential or small,⁶⁹ and in this sense is defined as meaning of real worth and importance;⁷⁰ of considerable value;⁷¹ valuable;⁷² considerable in amount, value, or the like.⁷³ In opposition to that which is inconsequential or small, the term is also

SUBSTITUTE. The word "substitute" does not have of itself a common-law meaning or any fixed and definite legal meaning;³³ but usually it presents the idea of something or someone substituted for another;³⁴ and, as a noun, "substitute" is defined as meaning one put in place of another;³⁵ one who acts or appears in another's stead;³⁶ one acting for, or taking the place of, another;³⁷ one who or that which stands in the place of another;³⁸ one who or that which takes the place or serves in lieu of another;³⁹ that which is put in the place of another thing, or used instead of something else;⁴⁰ that which stands in lieu of something else.⁴¹

In common speech and as defined by lexicographers,⁴² the verb "to substitute" means to put in place of;⁴³ to take the place of;⁴⁴ to put one person or thing in the place of another;⁴⁵ to put in the place of another person or thing;⁴⁶ to exchange;⁴⁷ to put under.⁴⁸

"Substitute" as a noun has been distinguished from "deputy" see 26 C.J.S. p 978 note 90, and "device" see 26 C.J.S. p 1295 note 60, and the verb "substitute" has been held synonymous with "restore" see 77 C.J.S. p 323 note 12.

Substituted. It has been said that the word "substituted" describes a replacement of one thing by another;⁴⁹ and in its ordinary sense and well-known meaning designates something placed in a position previously occupied by another thing;⁵⁰ and implies the removal or elimination of the thing replaced,⁵¹ since something cannot be substituted for something else unless that for which the substitution is made is taken out and that which is substituted is inserted in its place.⁵²

Phrases employing various forms of the word are set out in the note.⁵³

SUBSTITUTION. The word "substitution," as employed generally, connotes the replacement of one unit for another unit,⁵⁴ and is defined as meaning change of one thing for another;⁵⁵ the designation

by a person of a person or thing to take the place of himself or another person or of some other thing.⁵⁶

The term may be used as meaning the putting in the place of another in an exchange,⁵⁷ and it may be employed as comprising a change in the form of an amendment.⁵⁸

"Substitution" has been held synonymous with "subrogation" see Subrogation § 1, and it has been distinguished from "alteration" see 3 C.J.S. p 900 note 49, "amendatory" see 3 C.J.S. p 1041 note 96, "amendment" see 3 C.J.S. p 1042 note 36.5, and "modification" see 58 C.J.S. p 840 note 4.

The word "substitution" is sometimes employed with reference to dispositions of property, and in Perpetuities § 75 it is stated that "substitution," in the civil law is defined as the act of a testator in naming a second devisee or legatee who is to take the bequest either on failure of the original devisee or legatee or after him. In connection with testamentary dispositions of property, the term "substitution" is generally applied to a limitation intended to provide for the death of a prior devisee or legatee before the period of distribution as stated in the C.J.S. title Wills § 737, also 69 C.J. p 351 note 47. It would appear that courts recognize that there may be two forms of substitution;⁵⁹ one form being a donation of property to a donee, who holds title and possession for life, without the power of alienation, the property to be transmitted at his death to a second one, originally designated by the donor. It is translated as "entail," and if not identical, it is analogous to a conveyance of a fee tail in the common law, and had the same historical origin, in that the device was created to perpetuate the power and wealth of great feudal families.⁶⁰ The second form of substitution is where a third person is called to take a gift, inheritance, or legacy in case the donee, heir, or legatee does not take it, and, while it is provided by statute in at least one jurisdiction that this shall not be considered a substitution,⁶¹ it has sometimes been referred to judicially as a "vulgar substitution."⁶²

SUCCESSION. The term "succession" is defined generally as meaning the act of succeeding, or the state of being successive; a following of things consecutively;⁹⁶ and, as applied to persons, a series of persons following one another.⁹⁷

It is defined more specifically as the act or right of legal or official investment with a predecessor's office, dignity, possessions, or functions;⁹⁸ also, the legal or actual order of so succeeding, or that which is or is to be vested or taken.⁹⁹

The word "succession" is also applied to lineage or order of descendants,¹ and may be employed to indicate the passing of property,² and in a technical sense it denotes the devolution of title to property under the laws of descent and distribution as stated in Descent and Distribution § 1 c.

SUCCESSIVE. The word "successive" imports concatenation, and it does not define duration,³ and it is defined as meaning following one after another in a line or series.⁴

It has been held synonymous with "consecutive" see 15 C.J.S. p 978 note 53, and has been distinguished from "isolated" see 48 C.J.S. p 776 note 55.

SUCCESSOR. The word "successor" is sometimes considered to be a term of art,¹¹ but it is also regarded as being a plastic word,¹² of the most general signification.¹³

It has a twofold meaning¹⁴ and may be used in the sense of one entitled to succeed as well as in the sense of one who has in fact succeeded.¹⁵

In a proper situation, it may mean succeeding to a place, or a right, or an interest, or a power, official or otherwise.¹⁶ While in modern acceptation the term has a broader significance than succession in respect of the estate of a deceased,¹⁷ it is an apt and appropriate term to designate one to whom property descends, as stated in Descent and Distribution § 1 c.

The term "successor" is variously defined as meaning he that followeth, or cometh in another's place;¹⁸ one that succeeds or follows;¹⁹ one who follows another into a position;²⁰ one who succeeds or takes the place of another;²¹ one who succeeds to the rights or place of another;²² one who takes the place of another by succession;²³ one who takes the place of a predecessor or preceding thing;²⁴ one who takes the place which another has left, and sustains the like part or character;²⁵ also, a person who has been appointed or elected to some office after another person.²⁶

The word "such" is a descriptive,³¹ limiting,³² and relative³³ term, which may be used as an adjective,³⁴ or as an adverb or pronoun.³⁵ It may be employed to refer to a person or thing previously mentioned,³⁶ or for purposes of comparison as to quality or character,³⁷ and it has been said that "such" is essentially a term of comparison.³⁸

In its natural³⁹ and ordinary⁴⁰ sense, and by grammatical usage,⁴¹ the word "such" refers to an antecedent,⁴² some antecedent word or phrase,⁴³ and, more specifically, to the last precedent⁴⁴ antecedent,⁴⁵ unless the meaning would thereby be impaired.⁴⁶ Thus the word "such" refers back to and identifies something previously spoken of,⁴⁷ something that has gone before,⁴⁸ something that has been specified.⁴⁹ It always refers to a class just before pointed out,⁵⁰ and should be construed as referring back to a common subject matter.⁵¹ It may be used as representing the object as already particularized in terms which are not mentioned,⁵²

Similarly expressed

"Such" is essentially a term of comparison, and to complete its force that with which comparison is made requires to be expressed, implied, or understood. When expressed, "as" or "that" is used before the subject of comparison as the correlative of "such;" as, "such" a voice "as" hers is unusual; the averment was "such that" it could not be gainsaid. Unlike attributive adjectives, it is not preceded by an article, but the indefinite article is often placed between it and the substantive it qualifies: as, "all," "some," "few," "many," precede "such"; as, "all such" follies; "many such" disasters.—U. S. v. Legg, C.C.A.W.Va., 157 F.2d 990, 992.

"Such" always implies from its sense a comparison with another thing, either unexpressed as being involved in the context or expressed, being then followed by "as" or "that" before the thing which is the subject of comparison.—Traders' Ins. Co. v. Dobbins & Ewing, 86 S.W. 383, 385, 114 Tenn. 227.

unlooked for;⁸⁹ unforeseen;⁹⁰ unprepared for.⁹¹

"Sudden" does not mean instantaneous,⁹² but it may mean quick;⁹³ rapid;⁹⁴ hasty by nature;⁹⁵ abrupt; precipitate; rash; violent.⁹⁶

The term "sudden" has been held synonymous with "prompt" see 73 C.J.S. p 131 note 54, and it has been distinguished from "deliberate" see 26 C.J.S. p 690 note 83, and "gradual" see 38 C.J.S. p 973 note 25.

Phrases employing the word "sudden" are set out in the note.⁹⁷

SUDDENLY. It has been said that the word "suddenly" is well understood by the average layman,⁹⁸ although it is an elastic,⁹⁹ relative¹ term, admitting of much variety of definition.² It is defined as meaning unexpectedly;³ hastily; without preparation or premeditation; quickly; immediately.⁴

"Suddenly" is said to be the antithesis of "gradually" see 38 C.J.S. p 973 note 27.

Various workmen's compensation acts provide that in order for hernia to be compensable it must have appeared suddenly, and the meaning of the word "suddenly" as used in such provisions is discussed in the C.J.S. title Workmen's Compensation Acts § 185, also 71 C.J. p 621 note 16—p 622 note 20.

SUE. To commence or to continue legal proceedings for the recovery of a right;⁵ to proceed with, as an action, and follow it up to its proper termination;⁶ to proceed legally to secure a right or re-

In a somewhat different sense the word "suffer" means to have the feeling or sensation that arises from the action of something painful, distressing, or the like;⁵⁶ to feel or endure pain; to feel pain, physical or mental;⁵⁷ to endure or undergo without sinking.⁵⁸

"Suffer" has been held equivalent to, or synonymous with, "approve of" see 6 C.J.S. p 129 note 11.1, "consent" see 15 C.J.S. p 982 note 67.1, "not to hinder" see 40 C.J.S. p 401 note 35, and "permit" see 70 C.J.S. p 568 note 70.

It has been compared with, or distinguished from, "allow" see 3 C.J.S. p 889 note 92, "cause" see 14 C.J.S. p 52 note 60, "do" see 27 C.J.S. p 1306 note 7, "permit" see 70 C.J.S. p 568 note 73, and "procure" see 72 C.J.S. p 1207 note 76.

"Suffering" is defined as meaning the undergoing or enduring of pain or distress, or a particular instance of this.⁵⁹ It has been distinguished from "cruelty" see 25 C.J.S. p 16 note 60.

"Suffered," the past participle of "suffer,"⁶⁰ has been held synonymous with "endured" see 30 C.J.S. p 243.

Phrases employing various forms of the word are set out in the note.⁶¹

SUFFERANCE. Toleration; negative permission by not forbidding; passive consent; license implied from the omission or neglect to enforce an adverse right.⁶² It connotes some opportunity for knowledge and something less than consent.⁶³

SUFFICIENCY. The state or quality of being sufficient; adequacy.⁶⁴ The term has been distinguished from "competency" see 15 C.J.S. p 659 note 66.

SUFFICIENT. The word "sufficient" is derived from the Latin "sufficiens."⁶⁵ It is a relative term,⁶⁶ and its meaning depends on the facts of each case,⁶⁷ and any determination of its meaning must take into account all the circumstances.⁶⁸ As generally understood, it relates to quantity rather than quality,⁶⁹ but it is frequently used in the sense of adequacy and adaptation to the end desired,⁷⁰ and, in law, when anything is said to be sufficient, it means that nothing else is required.⁷¹ It has been said that the

§ 1. Definition

Suicide is the taking of one's own life, and in its technical or legal sense requires that the self-destruction be intentional and by a sane person.

Suicide is the taking of one's own life.¹ When the term "suicide" is employed in its usual or colloquial and popular, as distinguished from its technical and legal, sense, it includes all cases of self-destruction irrespective of the mental condition of the person committing the act.² In its technical and legal sense it means self-destruction by a sane person³ or the voluntary and intentional destruction of his own life by a person of sound mind,⁴ the further qualification being added by some definitions that he must have attained years of discretion.⁵

follow therefrom.²¹ Nevertheless, in such jurisdictions, self-destruction ordinarily involves moral turpitude and is regarded as being wrong,²² and under some statutes it is recognized as a grave public wrong.²³

Whether or not considered as a felony, suicide is not now treated with the same severity as at common law,²⁴ and, since the successful suicide himself is no longer amenable to human punishment,²⁵ ordinarily the question of the criminality of his act is of importance only incidentally,²⁶ as determining the criminality of aiders and abettors, discussed infra § 4, or of persons joining in suicide pacts, considered infra § 5, or of attempts to commit suicide, discussed infra § 3, or in determining whether or not his act was such that it exempts an insurer from liability because his death was in or in consequence of a violation of law, discussed in Insurance §§ 847, 1576.

§ 3. Attempts

The attempt to commit suicide is an indictable offense at common law and under some statutes, but under other statutes it is held not an indictable offense.

If the act of suicide fails to accomplish its purpose, it constitutes an attempt to commit suicide,²⁷ which is unlawful and criminal,²⁸ and an indictable offense both at common law²⁹ and under some statutes.³⁰ Under other statutes, however,³¹ and in the absence of statute,³² an attempt to commit suicide is held not an indictable offense. A statute providing for the crime of an attempt,³³ or assault with intent,³⁴ to commit murder is not applicable to attempts to commit suicide.

§ 4. Advising, Aiding, or Inciting to Commit

At common law and under various statutes one who advises, aids, or incites another to commit suicide is criminally liable as a principal or as an accessory before the fact, but he has been held not criminally liable in jurisdictions where the suicide is regarded as innocent of criminality, unless his direct act takes the life of the suicide.

At common law one who advises or counsels self-murder by another is, if present at the act, a principal;³⁵ if not present he is, if guilty, guilty as an accessory before the fact.³⁶ Under statutes abolishing the distinction between an accessory before the fact and a principal and between principals in the first and second degrees, if the act of suicide is felonious the contributor to the criminal result is guilty whether present or absent,³⁷ but if the act of self-destruction was not a felony because of want of mental capacity he is not punishable if absent, because there can be no accessory before the fact where there can be no principal.³⁸

Without regard to whether or not the act of suicide or self-murder is a felony, it has been held that one who furnishes poison to another for the purpose and with the intent that he shall with it commit suicide, and he accordingly takes and uses it for that purpose,³⁹ or one who, whether or not he furnishes the poison, is present at the taking thereof, participating by persuasion, force, threats, or otherwise in its taking,⁴⁰ if death is thereby caused, may be guilty of murder as a principal. On the other hand, it has been held in a jurisdiction wherein the suicide is regarded as innocent of criminality, as discussed supra § 2, that one who merely furnishes means or agencies or affords an opportunity to the suicide to take his own life is free from criminality;⁴¹ but one whose direct act takes the life of the suicide is criminally liable therefor, as where he furnishes poison to a suicide, knowing the purpose of said suicide, and himself gives the medicine or poison by placing it in the mouth or other portion of the body of such suicide, resulting in death.⁴²

By express provision of some statutes one deliberately assisting another in the commission of self-murder is guilty of manslaughter.⁴³ Such a statute changes the common-law rule that the adviser is guilty of murder as an aider and abettor if present when his advice is carried out.⁴⁴

§ 5. — Compacts to Commit

Where two persons mutually agree to kill themselves together and one dies from, and the other survives, the attempt, the survivor is guilty of murder of the one who dies unless he abandoned his purpose and endeavored to persuade the other also to abandon it.

If two persons mutually agree to kill themselves together, and the means employed to produce death take effect on one only, the survivor may be held guilty of murder of the one who dies.⁴⁵ Under a statute providing that one deliberately assisting another in the commission of self-murder shall be guilty of manslaughter, a conviction cannot be had of one who, after entering into a mutual agreement with another to commit suicide, abandons his purpose and endeavors to persuade the other also to abandon it.⁴⁶

§ 6. Prosecution and Punishment

Subject to particular statutory requirements which may exist in a particular jurisdiction, the rules applicable to criminal prosecutions generally, and particularly those relating to prosecutions for homicide, apply to prosecutions for an attempt to commit suicide and for aiding, advising, or inciting another to commit suicide.

The rules applicable to criminal prosecutions generally, as discussed in Criminal Law §§ 300-1957, and more particularly those relating to prosecutions for homicide, considered in Homicide §§ 139-437, apply to prosecutions for aiding, advising, or inciting another to commit suicide.⁴⁷ In a prosecution for murder where it is not shown or claimed that accused directly administered the poison of which deceased died, but that the taking of it was by his procurement, there must be strict proof of the latter fact,⁴⁸ and the evidence must show beyond a reasonable doubt that he did or said something which aided, encouraged, or induced deceased to kill himself.⁴⁹ Where the evidence that accused did or said anything which induced decedent to kill himself rests wholly on the alleged admissions of accused, the jury should be fairly instructed as to the character of, and the weight to be given to, admissions made under the circumstances shown in the case.⁵⁰ Where the statute punishes as manslaughter the deliberate assisting of another in the commission of self-murder, one accused of murder is entitled to an instruction properly submitting to the jury his right to change his mind and escape from the consequences of an agreement with deceased to commit suicide,⁵¹ as well as correct instructions in other respects.⁵² Under an indictment for murder charging accused with "administering or causing to be administered" to deceased a poison because of which he died, an instruction may be given with respect to the guilt of one who incites another to commit suicide.⁵³ Under a statute to the effect that a conviction cannot be predicated on a confession alone, the trial court was warranted in giving a peremptory instruction to find accused not guilty of the crime of being an accessory before the fact to a suicide, where there was no evidence of accessory acts, save his own confessions.⁵⁴ In some jurisdictions the attempt to commit suicide is punishable as a misdemeanor.⁵⁵

§ 1. Definition

A summary proceeding is a proceeding not according to the course of the common law, or a form of trial in which the ancient established course of a legal proceeding is disregarded.

A summary proceeding has been defined as a proceeding which is not according to the course of the common law,¹ or a form of trial in which the ancient established course of a legal proceeding is disregarded, especially in the matter of trial by jury, and, in the case of the heavier crimes, presentment by a grand jury.² Summary, in such case, means with dispatch, with the least possible delay, and in preference to ordinary legal and regular judicial proceedings.³

§ 2. Nature

Summary proceedings are statutory, except in the few instances where such proceedings were allowed at common law, and they are generally held to be cumulative and judicial in their nature.

Except in those rare instances in which summary procedure was allowed at common law, such as with respect to punishment for contempt, as discussed in Contempt § 62, and suspension or disbarment of attorney, as considered in Attorney and Client § 28, summary proceedings are statutory and may be resorted to only where there is express authority therefor,⁴ or, it has been stated, where the demand made therein is incidental to the main demand contained in a suit which is pending between the parties.⁵

Civil or criminal. Summary proceedings are not exclusively criminal in their nature but, as considered in various titles throughout this work, are often available to enforce civil rights, as, for example, proceedings for judgment on motion, discussed in Judgments §§ 219-227; but in one jurisdiction it has been said that a summary proceeding, strictly speaking, is a criminal prosecution, and as such must always be commenced in the name of the commonwealth.⁶

Cumulative or exclusive. Summary proceedings are generally held to be cumulative in their nature,⁷ not interfering with the availability of general remedies⁸ or restricted in their application by the fact that a remedy under general laws is also available.⁹

Judicial or nonjudicial. The fact that a proceeding is summary does not make it any the less judicial.¹⁰

§ 3. Construction of Statutes

Statutes authorizing summary proceedings should be strictly construed, but not so as to defeat the beneficial objects intended.

Summary proceedings being in derogation of common law¹¹ must conform closely to the statutes authorizing them, as discussed infra § 4 a, which are to be strictly construed,¹² so as to apply only in the particular cases or situations specified in the statutes,¹³ and are not to be extended by implication or intendment.¹⁴ However, it has been held that a statute making a particular proceeding a summary one, free from technical and formal obstructions, should be construed liberally.¹⁵ No such restrictive construction should be adopted as will defeat or frustrate the beneficial objects of furnishing a short and expeditious method of recovery in the class of actions mentioned and avoiding unnecessary trouble and expense in the trial.¹⁶

A statute providing for the recovery of an amount due by summary process, as in case of a confession of judgment, has been held to provide a remedy for the more speedy enforcement of an obligation, and not to affect in any manner the obligation of the contract.¹⁷

Statutes providing for summary proceedings have been held to provide only for the future and to be not retroactive.¹⁸

§ 4. Procedure

- a. In general
- b. Pleadings
- c. Right to jury trial
- d. Hearing
- e. Relief
- f. Record
- g. Review

a. In General

The procedure in summary proceedings is governed by statute, the provisions of which must be strictly complied with; but the process or notice to defendant to appear need not satisfy the requirements of formal summonses.

Procedure in summary proceedings is governed by the provisions of the statute or statutes under which the proceedings are instituted,¹⁹ which provisions must be strictly complied with,²⁰ and the party pursuing such a remedy must bring his case strictly within the requirements of the statute.²¹ The proceedings are not intended to be carried on in the formal manner in which ordinary actions are prosecuted,²² and it is unnecessary to pursue with exactitude the requirements of the law as normally observed in a civil action between litigants.²³

It has been held that courts as a rule are not hospitable to summary proceedings, and that it is always a question of discretion whether a court will entertain such a proceeding or will relegate the moving party to a plenary suit.²⁴ The power to bring a citizen before the court summarily and otherwise than in accordance with the duly prescribed procedure is somewhat arbitrary in character and one which should be used sparingly and only when its use is clearly authorized.²⁵

A defendant cannot convert an ordinary action into a summary one by reconvening therein, or a summary action into an ordinary one by the same means.²⁶

Process. In summary proceedings, although defendant must be notified or summoned to appear,²⁷ the process or notice need not satisfy the requirements of formal summonses,²⁸ and it has been stated that a summary proceeding ordinarily implies one begun without summons or subpoena and usually tried on short notice.²⁹

b. Pleadings

Defendant must be apprised of the nature and purpose of the proceeding by such form of pleading as the statute requires, which pleading must show all the facts necessary to support the proceedings, but formal pleading is not usually necessary and defendant may make any proper defense.

Defendant must be apprised of the nature and purpose of the proceeding³⁰ by notice,³¹ motion,³² affidavit,³³ information,³⁴ declaration,³⁵ or complaint,³⁶ as the statute may require, which must show all the facts necessary to support the proceedings.³⁷ Formal pleading is not, however, usually necessary in summary proceedings,³⁸ and, unless the statute otherwise provides, it is competent for defendant, without as well as with pleas, to make any proper defense.³⁹ Any defense which could have been pleaded in an ordinary law action will be considered as though formally pleaded.⁴⁰ Defects and irregularities in the pleadings may be cured by amendment or supplemental pleadings.⁴¹

Any evidence which would have been admissible under any form of pleading is admissible.⁴²

c. Right to Jury Trial

As a general rule summary proceedings are triable without a jury.

While the question of the constitutionality of statutes authorizing summary proceedings arises more particularly with respect to infringement of the right to trial by jury guaranteed by the federal Constitution and state constitution, and the due process of law clause, these constitutions have been uniformly construed as not conferring a right to trial by jury in all cases and as not extending the right to cases in which it was not allowed at common law, but simply as guaranteeing that right unchanged as it existed at common law or by statute in the particular state at the time of the adoption of the constitution, except as modified by the constitution itself; and since at common law the right to trial by jury did not exist in summary proceedings,⁴³ these proceedings are still triable without a jury.⁴⁴ Indeed, if the procedure under the statute is to be without a jury, a jury cannot be called.⁴⁵ However, a legislature cannot authorize a summary procedure in controversies properly triable by jury at common law or according to the practice of the particular jurisdiction prior to the adoption of the constitution.⁴⁶

The question of the right to a jury trial in summary proceedings is discussed in §§ 50-74, 77 of the title Juries with respect to various particular proceedings.

d. Hearing

In summary proceedings a hearing generally is required at which defendant is given an opportunity to hear what is urged against him and to interpose a defense.

Under statutes authorizing summary proceedings, although the hearing is sometimes ex parte,⁴⁷ ordinarily it is not,⁴⁸ and defendant is notified or summoned to appear and is given an opportunity to hear what is urged against him,⁴⁹ and to interpose a defense,⁵⁰ after which follows an adjudication of the rights of the parties.⁵¹ The court may continue the hearing as justice and right may demand.⁵² While the hearing is usually or quite generally on affidavits,⁵³ summary proceedings follow the common-law rules of evidence in the absence of a statute providing otherwise.⁵⁴

e. Relief

In summary proceedings the judgment must be such as is authorized by law, and must be supported by, and in conformity with, proof adduced at the hearing.

The judgment in summary proceedings must be such as is authorized by law.⁵⁵ Where no good cause is shown why the relief should not be granted,⁵⁶ or where defendant in a summary proceeding refuses to answer interrogatories propounded to him,⁵⁷ the relief may be given as prayed, or, in some instances, defendant may be given a reasonable time to act or perform before an order is made final.⁵⁸ Whether or not defendant appears evidence must be adduced to establish the right to the relief sought,⁵⁹ and the judgment rendered should be in conformity with the proof adduced.⁶⁰

Summary relief may be refused where the right of the party claiming to be entitled thereto is in doubt,⁶¹ and the party put to his action.⁶² Judgment by default is not authorized.⁶³

Under some statutes a money judgment cannot be recovered by summary proceeding if objected to by defendant.⁶⁴

f. Record

In summary proceedings a record must be made which must show every fact necessary to warrant and sustain a recovery or a legal conviction and that the remedy has been pursued according to the statute.

It is in general essential, more particularly in proceedings of a penal nature, that a record be made⁶⁵ which should show every fact necessary to warrant and sustain a recovery or a legal conviction⁶⁶ and that the remedy has been pursued according to the statute.⁶⁷ Thus, the record must show jurisdiction of the court,⁶⁸ the serving of a summons, notice, or complaint,⁶⁹ or, in the absence of such showing, that defendant appeared,⁷⁰ as well as the evidence⁷¹ and the adjudication of the court,⁷² unless the statute regulating the proceeding specifically provides that any of such matters need not be recorded.⁷³

Summary proceedings may be reviewed by certiorari, but an appeal will not lie in such proceedings unless authorized by statute.

Certiorari may be awarded for the purpose of examining adjudications made in summary proceedings.⁷⁴ In the absence of a statutory provision therefor no appeal will lie in summary proceedings,⁷⁵ and the right is not conferred by a general statute giving a right of appeal from the judgments of particular courts.⁷⁶ Special provision for a full or limited right to appeal from such proceedings is frequently made by statutes authorizing them, and the appeal must be taken to the court designated by the statute.⁷⁷ Where defendant voluntarily appears the same presumptions as to jurisdictional facts are indulged in on appeal as in the case of actions on summons and complaint.⁷⁸

Notice of application for appeal must be given to the appellee or defendant in error in such proceedings when required by statute⁷⁹ or rule of court.⁸⁰

SUMMER. The season of the year in which the influence of the sun is most directly and continuously felt; the hottest or warmest quarter of the year.¹ The term strictly, perhaps, includes only the months of June, July, and August, yet is frequently used in a more general sense to indicate the warmest period of the year.²

SUMMI CUJUSQUE BONITAS COMMUNE PER-FUGIUM OMNIBUS. See 60 C.J. p 1019 note 6.

SUMMON. As a verb the term is defined generally as meaning to command to appear at a specific time and place; command to attend; cite.³

References to the term "summoning" in connection with juries and grand juries are made in the indexes to the titles Juries and Grand Juries.

SUMMONITIONES. As the first word of a maxim as to which there have been no recent applications see 60 C.J. p 1020 note 12.

SUMMONS. The word "summons" is defined generally as meaning a call to attend or act, as at a particular place or time.⁴

The word "summons" is employed in the law in connection with both civil and criminal proceedings. On the civil side of the law a summons is a means or process whereby the defendant is notified to appear at the proper time and place to answer the complaint against him, as stated in Process § 1 f (2). On the criminal side a summons is also so employed in some jurisdictions, but only in the case of minor offenses, as stated in Criminal Law § 316. See also the index to the title Criminal Law.

I. DEFINITION AND NATURE

§ 1. Definition, Origin, and Nature

- a. Definition, nature, and distinctions
- b. Origin

a. Definition, Nature, and Distinctions

Sunday, the first day of the week, is legally a day of rest. "Sunday," "Sabbath," "the Lord's Day," and "the first day of the week" are used interchangeably.

Sunday is a day of the week, the first day of the week;¹ a day of dual character;² a holy day;³ the day set apart for cessation from all secular employment by the Christian world.⁴ It is a day of rest⁵ and, legally considered, merely a day of rest.⁶

The words "Sabbath" and "Sunday" are not strictly synonymous, the one signifying the Jewish Sabbath, which is the seventh day of the week, and the other, the first day of the week;⁷ but the expressions "the first day of the week," the "Sabbath," "the Lord's day," and "Sunday" are used interchangeably and synonymously, both in legislation⁸ and in common parlance.⁹ The Sabbath is a day of rest and worship, generally recognized as such.¹⁰

The Jewish Sabbath, as observed by orthodox Jews, begins with the appearance of the stars, or at sundown Friday evening, and ends with the appearance of the stars, or at sundown, Saturday evening.¹¹

Civil and political institution. As a day set apart for rest and cessation from labor, Sunday has long been recognized as a civil¹² and political¹³ institution.

b. Origin

The observance of Sunday is among the first institutions of the Christian religion, and is an established custom more ancient than our common law or form of government.

Sunday is among the first and most sacred institutions of the Christian religion;¹⁴ the observance of Sunday is one of our established customs,¹⁵ and is more ancient than our common law or our form of government.¹⁶ The fourth commandment directs abstention from labor on the Sabbath, but the day there designated is the seventh day of the week, and the injunction has been deemed to apply to the Hebrews only.¹⁷ There is nothing in the New Testament relating to Sunday or the Sabbath;¹⁸ but, by common consent, the Christians at an early date substituted the first day of the week for the seventh, and have since observed it as a day of rest and worship in commemoration of the Resurrection.¹⁹

§ 2. Duration of Day

Except where a statute provides otherwise, Sunday is generally regarded as the natural day of twenty-four hours between midnight at the end of Saturday and midnight at the beginning of Monday.

In so far as the duration of Sunday is particularly limited or established by statute, it includes only the time falling within the limits thus declared;²⁰ but, in the absence of any such statute expressly or by necessary construction establishing a different rule, Sunday is the natural day²¹ of twenty-four hours²² existing between midnight at the end of Saturday and midnight at the beginning of Monday,²³ at least with respect to the extent of the day in connection with statutes prohibiting certain acts on Sunday which are lawful at other times.²⁴ There is some authority, however, recognizing a distinction between the duration of Sunday considered in that connection and its duration as dies non juridicus, on which judicial functions are not to be performed,²⁵ and holding that, for the latter purpose, Sunday is confined to that part of the natural day falling between sunrise and sunset;²⁶ but elsewhere this distinction is disregarded, at least where the judicial act involved is one falling within the prohibition of a statute with respect to Sunday.²⁷

Duration of Sabbath. A statutory exception in favor of those keeping the seventh day as Sabbath, has been held not necessarily to refer to the natural day of Saturday, but to the day recognized and fixed for religious observance, such as the time from starlight on Friday evening until starlight on Saturday evening.²⁸

Evening of Lord's day. A reference in a statute to the evening of the Lord's day refers to Sunday evening, and not Saturday evening.²⁹

a. In General; History

Constitutional and statutory regulation of Sunday observance is widespread and of ancient origin.

The observance of Sunday is recognized by constitutions and legislative enactments, both state and federal;³⁰ and Sunday prohibitory laws are said to have been enacted in all the states.³¹ Such laws are said to have a religious³² or divine³³ origin.

Sunday legislation is more than fifteen centuries old;³⁴ it originated in Rome in A. D. 321, when Constantine the Great passed an edict commanding all judges and inhabitants of cities to rest on the venerable day of the sun.³⁵ Sunday statutes were passed at an early date in England³⁶ and 29 Charles II c 7 has been made the basis of similar legislation in many of the states.³⁷ A few statutes regulating the observance of Sunday were enacted in the United States during the colonial period.³⁸

A statute providing a punishment for anyone who does any manner of labor, business, or work, except works of necessity or charity, on Sunday, at most makes illegal, if done on Sunday, what otherwise might be legal.³⁹

b. Object and Purpose

The object of Sunday laws is, in general, to enforce a cessation from labor on one day in seven, and not to impose the observance of Sunday as a religious duty.

The object and policy of laws designating Sunday as a day of rest and prohibiting the doing of specified acts on that day are, in general, to enforce a cessation from labor on one day in seven⁴⁰ and to protect citizens in the enjoyment of repose and quiet on the day thus assigned,⁴¹ and therefore to promote the health, peace, good order,⁴² and morality⁴³ of society.

Such regulation is essentially civil and not religious,⁴⁴ and the statutes are not to be regarded, in the present day, as religious ordinances.⁴⁵ So, ordinarily, it is not the purpose of such laws to impose the observance of Sunday as a purely religious duty,⁴⁶ although instances exist where, taking the whole of the particular statute into consideration, it has been held to have as a primary object the prevention of the desecration of the Lord's day and not the enforcement of a day of rest.⁴⁷

tion, it has been held that their purpose is to define more certainly the application which the general Sunday laws are intended to have,⁴⁸ and again that the purpose is to provide an appropriate penalty for the particular offense.⁴⁹

Freedom of religious thought and worship is not a license to do on Sunday any act otherwise forbidden by law, nor may anyone circumvent the provisions of a Sunday statute under the guise of religious belief.⁵⁰

c. Constitutionality and Validity

Sunday regulations have generally been upheld as legitimate exercises of the police power.

The right of the state to pass a Sunday law is not open to question.⁵¹ The enactment of Sunday regulations is an exercise of the police power,⁵² and such regulations are constitutional in the same manner and to the same extent as other legislation legitimately resting on that power;⁵³ but, while the state has the power to impose on the public the civil duty of observing one day out of seven to rest,⁵⁴ it is beyond its power to impose the observance of Sunday as a religious duty.⁵⁵

The fact that a Sunday law may not be appropriate to the conditions now existing, although it was appropriate to the conditions at the time of its passage, does not affect its validity.⁵⁶

d. Authority of Municipality Generally

Within the limits of state statutes, Sunday observance may be the subject of reasonable police regulations by municipalities.

The securing of the proper observance of Sunday may be the subject of reasonable police regulation by municipal corporations,⁵⁷ either under the general police power⁵⁸ or under an express or implied grant of power for the purpose.⁵⁹ The general statutes of the state on this subject fix the limit and measure of municipal police power in this respect,⁶⁰ unless the charter expressly confers more.⁶¹ The grant of power to a city, by statute, to prohibit and suppress desecration of the Sabbath day is proper, since the proper body to define such desecration is the local authority in touch with the public sentiment of its community.⁶²

The municipality need not cover the entire field of the statute;⁶³ and an ordinance forbidding only a portion of the acts denounced by statute may be valid.⁶⁴

§ 4. Scope and Extent of Sunday Laws in General

In general, the illegality or prohibition of acts on Sunday arises only from statutes.

Although it has been said that the common law recognized the sanctity of the Lord's day,⁶⁵ at common law the observance of Sunday is a duty of imperfect obligation;⁶⁶ all prohibitions of ordinary business on the day come from statute,⁶⁷ and, aside from judicial transactions, all acts not otherwise unlawful and not prohibited by statute may be lawfully done.⁶⁸ The illegality of a given act must be determined by a statute forbidding it,⁶⁹ and the courts will not extend the requirements of Sunday observance on considerations of public policy to prohibit acts which are not forbidden by statute.⁷⁰

Where the statute inflicts a penalty for the doing of certain acts on Sunday, although the acts themselves are not expressly prohibited, it is unlawful to do such acts.⁷¹

However, without reference to Sunday legislation, acts done on that day to the annoyance or disturbance of others may constitute nuisances or disorderly conduct, even though they might not do so on week days, since the character of the day is such that the public peace and order are then more readily subject to being disturbed.⁷²

General prohibition; necessity or charity

day different from that involved in statutes prohibiting conduct of such character, but they are unlawful only when done during a certain part of the day.⁷³

§ 5. — Work or Labor

The nature and extent of statutory prohibitions or restrictions of Sunday work or labor depend on the language of the particular statutes as variously construed by the courts.

The common law does not prohibit labor on Sunday;⁷⁴ but a statute by which the performance of work and labor on that day is forbidden, except work of necessity or charity, has been held constitutional,⁷⁵ as has a statute prohibiting the carrying on of certain work on the first day of the week;⁷⁶ and it has been broadly stated, of a particular Sunday law, that it prohibits work on that day.⁷⁷ Municipal corporations may, within reasonable limits, prohibit work or labor on Sunday.⁷⁸

Where the prohibition is not universal, as where there are permitted exceptions incorporated in the statute, all labor is not ipso facto illegal;⁷⁹ and such labor as is a necessary incident to the accomplishment of a lawful purpose is itself lawful.⁸⁰ The term "labor," as used in such statutes, is not coextensive with "business;"⁸¹ it extends, subject to the limitations and exceptions therein expressed, to work generally, as distinguished from the pursuit of business,⁸² and, conversely, does not include acts in the transaction of business which are not labor.⁸³

In applying the statutory language to particular activities, it has been held that by labor as therein used is meant physical exertion of a toilsome nature indulged in by mankind to acquire a sustenance;⁸⁴ but, according to other authority, a statutory prohibition on "laboring" inhibits every kind of labor, mental or physical, in any trade, calling, or business.⁸⁵ The conduct of an employer who keeps his employees at work on Sunday and personally conducts, oversees, and carries on his business, although he does not himself perform any manual tasks, has been held to be labor.⁸⁶ Physical exertion alone does not constitute labor within the meaning of the statute.⁸⁷

A prohibition of secular business or labor on Sunday is not to be restricted to the protection of servants and the prohibition of servile labor;⁸⁸ and "labor," within the prohibitions of the Sunday laws, is not confined to menial work.⁸⁹ Where the statute forbidding labor also prohibits other particular matters, such as the conducting of certain businesses, the prohibition of labor is not confined to labor in connection with the other matters prohibited, but includes labor in connection with any matter whatsoever as to which no exception is applicable;⁹⁰ but where an ordinance prohibits the carrying on of named occupations "or other trade requiring the exercise of manual labor," the quoted phrase can only refer back to the things specifically enumerated, and must be un-

The element of compensation is immaterial in determining whether a particular activity is or is not within a prohibition of labor;⁹² it may be labor even though it is uncompensated, and conversely, although compensated, it may not be labor, depending altogether on the nature and character of the acts done.⁹³

Common labor, as used in such statutes, has been held to be incapable of exact definition.⁹⁴ According to some authorities, it signifies any labor that is manual, as distinguished from intellectual;⁹⁵ but there is other authority expressly rejecting this distinction,⁹⁶ or holding that the term comprises the transacting of the ordinary business affairs of life.⁹⁷ Skilled labor has been held not comprised within the term.⁹⁸ The term includes only such acts as may ordinarily be performed on other days in the pursuit of a lawful employment.⁹⁹

"Servile labor" has been held not to mean the same as "labor," "common labor," "secular labor," or "work,"¹ but to have a special meaning of menial labor or, as is sometimes said, such work with the hands as was formerly done by slave labor;² but under other authority, "servile labor" means "secular labor," at least in connection with exceptions

in favor of persons observing another day.³

Compelling labor of others. A statute forbidding persons to compel others to labor on Sunday has been held violated when such others actually do labor on Sunday in consequence of an option given them to rest either Saturday or Sunday, and labor on the other day.⁴

§ 6. — Business or Occupation

Laws prohibiting the carrying on of one's business, or the transaction of business, on Sunday, have been construed with respect to such matters as the contemplation of profit and the operation of a business through agents or employees.

At common law all business other than judicial proceedings can lawfully be transacted on Sunday.⁵ However, the carrying on of one's business or occupation, or the transaction of business on Sunday, is specifically prohibited in many jurisdictions by statute,⁶ and municipal corporations may regulate the conduct of business on Sunday.⁷

Under statutes prohibiting the carrying on of one's business or occupation, or the transaction of business, on Sunday, "worldly employment or business" has been held to comprehend only such acts as are in engaged in with a view to compensation or profit;⁸ but, according to other authority, a "Home show"

(1) It is a violation of a statute prohibiting the performance of any worldly employment or business on Sunday to conduct on that day an exhibit termed a "home show," the object of which is to stimulate an interest in home purchasing, modernization, and improvements by commercial and educational exhibits and motion pictures; nor is it material whether an admission fee is charged. —Commonwealth v. McDonald, 32 Pa.Dist. & Co. 257.

(2) Motion pictures generally see infra § 18 b.

place may be one of "business" under statutes prohibiting the keeping open of places of "public business," although the transactions carried on there are not engaged in with a view to profit.⁹ "Avocation," as used in a Sunday statute, has been held to have the sense of vocation or calling,¹⁰ but includes only such acts as may ordinarily be performed on other days in the pursuit of a lawful employment.¹¹

A single act in the pursuit of a prohibited employment is a violation of a law of this character;¹² but the statute is not concerned with the proscription of any one or more distinct acts, but with the exercise of a business or employment, whether the act or acts which constitute such employment are one or many.¹³

Where the statutes forbid the carrying on of certain specified business on Sunday, the mere fact that acts are done as, and in pursuance of, a private business enterprise does not render them illegal, if the enterprise in question is not one of the kind dealt with by the statute¹⁴ or if the person so acting is not within the terms of the statute,¹⁵ but statutory exceptions as to certain businesses do not authorize the operation in connection with them of other businesses not within the designated exceptions.¹⁶ A general prohibition of worldly employment, labor, or business is not ordinarily to be limited to only such work, labor, or business as is servile in character,¹⁷ but comprehends any secular employment or business.¹⁸

Personal engagement; operation through others. A person may be guilty of carrying on his ordinary business on Sunday where he knows of and consents to its operation, even though he himself does not personally engage in any transactions, but merely operates the business through his servants, on that day;¹⁹ but a person cannot be held, for violation of prohibitions against following his ordinary avocation, when his business is carried on without his assent by an agent or employee.²⁰

§ 7. — Keeping Open Shop

a. In general

b. Persons who may commit offense

a. In General

Sunday closing laws have generally been upheld, although particular ordinances have been held invalid. Such laws have been construed with respect to such matters as what constitutes keeping open, establishments not included, effect of nontransaction of business, and keeping open an illegal business.

Where the opening or the keeping open of any, or of certain, establishments on Sunday for purposes of business is forbidden by statute or ordinance, the keeping open of any prohibited business not within any statutory exceptions is an infraction of the law,²¹ at least where persons are actually received and dealt with there in the way of business.²² General Sunday closing laws have been enacted in nearly every state,²³ and have uniformly been upheld as constitutional²⁴ and the terms of one such statute have been held so plain and understandable that no judicial construction is required.²⁵ Such a statute has been held not a regulation based exclusively on religious considerations.²⁶

Ordinances requiring Sunday closing have been held clearly within the legislative authority of a municipality to enact,²⁷ and such an ordinance has been held valid,²⁸ and not unreasonable,²⁹ oppressive, or in derogation of common right;³⁰ ordinances of this nature, if not violative of the powers given to cities, should not be overruled or nullified by the courts, but their repeal must be by the city councils.³¹ On the other hand, particular ordinances have been held invalid as arbitrary and discriminatory,³² as violating a statute forbidding the keeping open of any store,³³ as contravening, and being inconsistent with, the general law with respect to Sabbathbreaking,³⁴ or as bearing no reasonable relationship to the objectives to be accomplished by ordinances pursuant to the legislative grant of power to municipalities.³⁵

What constitutes keeping open generally. Statutes which, in terms, prohibit a keeping open merely mean, it is held, to prohibit a keeping open for purposes of traffic or business³⁶ rather than merely opening the doors or keeping them open.³⁷ There is a keeping open, within the statute, whenever the establishment is kept accessible to those wishing to enter for purposes of traffic, trade, or employment,³⁸ and it is immaterial whether or not a sale is made.³⁹ It is immaterial, save on the question of proof and as an index of intention, whether the doors of the building are kept open or closed⁴⁰ and whether entrance is gained through a front, side, or back door.⁴¹

Opening for purpose other than trade or traffic. At least unless there is some public policy operating against the particular character of business affected,⁴² the mere opening of an establishment re-

Statutory source of power

(1) The legislature has delegated to cities power to legislate by ordinance on subject of Sunday closing in any way not in conflict with state constitution or federal Constitution or general statutes on subject.—Ex parte Johnson, 141 P.2d 599, 77 Okl. Cr. 360.

(2) A statute empowering cities to regulate the police of the city or village and to pass and enforce all necessary police ordinances authorizes a city to pass comprehensive Sunday closing ordinances, the power being referable to the general welfare branch of police power.—City of Mt. Vernon v. Julian, 17 N.E.2d 52, 369 Ill. 447, 119 A.L.R. 747.

(3) Statute granting to municipalities power to pass ordinances and make all regulations, not repugnant to law, necessary for safety, preservation of health, prosperity, and morals of city and inhabitants is sufficiently comprehensive to grant authority to pass a Sunday closing ordinance otherwise valid; welfare clauses providing in a general way that cities shall have such power generally include power to make Sunday closing regulations.—Gronlund v. Salt Lake City, 194 P.2d 464, 113 Utah 284.

(4) Police power as basis of Sunday legislation generally see supra § 3 c.

Failure to enforce conditions of proviso of such an ordinance, while it may serve to indict the police officers of the municipality, forms no basis for an attack on the constitutionality of the ordinance.—State v. Trantham, 55 S.E.2d 198, 230 N.C. 641.

quired to be kept closed or the entrance of the person in charge thereof is not of itself unlawful,⁴³ as where it is for purposes unconnected with any exercise of trade or traffic on Sunday;⁴⁴ and the establishment may even be opened and persons admitted to receive the goods or services ordinarily dispensed there, under some circumstances, without violating the requirement.⁴⁵

Nonadmittance of customers to place kept open for traffic. The nonadmittance of customers is not available, in evasion of the statute, where the ordinary trade or traffic of the establishment continues to be performed.⁴⁶

Engaging in traffic after opening for different purpose. For whatever purpose the place is opened, if members of the public are allowed to enter and after entrance the owner actually carries on the transactions usually conducted there, it is a keeping open within the statute.⁴⁷

Distinction between keeping open and acts in pursuit of traffic. Keeping open establishments for trade or traffic is separate and distinct from the pursuit of the trade or traffic which is ordinarily exercised in the establishments thus ordered closed,⁴⁸ and which may be exercised on Sundays in such a manner as not to violate the proscription on open shops without being unlawful by reason thereof;⁴⁹ it is the keeping open for traffic and not the performance of specific acts of business, such as the making of sales, which is forbidden.⁵⁰

Effect of transaction or nontransaction of business in shop; intent. The sale of goods or other transaction of business therein is not necessary to the existence of the offense,⁵¹ and the offense is complete when there coexists with such physical opening of the establishment as is within the statute a readiness on the part of the proprietor to carry on business in his establishment.⁵² Such an intention is requisite, however,⁵³ and, if an establishment is opened and trade carried on without the knowledge or consent of those having the management and control, they are not liable.⁵⁴

Establishments not included in scope of statute. Where statutes forbid the opening or keeping open for purposes of business of certain classes of establishments only, the opening for such purpose of a shop of a nature not therein described is lawful.⁵⁵

Shops where more than one kind of trade or traffic is pursued. An establishment where more than one kind of goods or services is dealt in may ordinarily keep open for the supplying of any of them which the statute excepts or does not prohibit,⁵⁶ although there is authority to the contrary.⁵⁷ Nevertheless, it may not continue to supply such as do fall within the statutory prohibitions, and doing so is, at least to that extent, an unlawful keeping open, unprotected by the lawful transactions carried on at the same place.⁵⁸

Regular or usual course of business not essential. The business need not be pursued in the regular and usual manner if in fact the establishment is kept open for purposes of a prohibited traffic, trade, or employment.⁵⁹

Keeping open illegal business. The laws against keeping open are not limited in operation to legitimate establishments only, and hence the fact that the business as transacted was illegal under other statutes is no defense to a prosecution for Sabbathbreaking.⁶⁰

b. Persons Who May Commit Offense

Anyone having control as to closing or opening an establishment on Sunday is liable if he keeps it open; one having no such control is not liable unless made so by the statute.

With respect to the application of Sunday closing laws, the ownership of the establishment is immaterial;⁶¹ anyone having the direction and management of the enterprise and the control as to whether it shall or shall not be kept open is liable if he does keep it open.⁶² However, those who can in no respect be considered as having any control or management of the enterprise illegally kept open and operating on Sunday are not liable,⁶³ except where the statute is specifically extended to include them.⁶⁴

Partner. A member of a business partnership is liable in his individual capacity if he opens the establishment or engages in traffic therein on Sunday,⁶⁵ and this is true even though he is only a nominal partner.⁶⁶

§ 8. — Disturbance of Public

Whether the disturbance of others, or of the public generally, is an essential element of illegal acts committed on Sunday depends on the language of the controlling statute.

The disturbance of others, even by acts amounting to disorderly conduct, is not of itself violative of Sunday laws against business or employment, sports or diversions.⁶⁷ Acts prohibiting the exercise generally of work, business, or labor, or the engaging in worldly business or employment on Sunday are generally held not limited in their prohibitions to matters tending to affect or disturb others,⁶⁸ although some statutes have been so construed;⁶⁹ and acts prohibiting the keeping open of a shop forbid the carrying on of the business of the week either secretly or openly,⁷⁰ as do also acts specifically enumerating and prohibiting certain specific acts or matters.⁷¹ On the other hand, statutes which merely prohibit public selling, or offering, or exposing for sale, on Sunday are not designed to forbid business transactions which in no manner affect the rights of others who are observing the day⁷² and which are made without tending to violate the public order and solemnity of the day;⁷³ and a like result has been reached as to statutory prohibitions directed against public sports, exercises, or shows.⁷⁴

Where statutes expressly prohibit certain acts done on Sunday only where they are done to the disturbance of others,⁷⁵ or are confined by their terms to whoever disturbs the peace and good order of society by his conduct on Sunday,⁷⁶ or expressly declare as their object the prohibition of acts which are serious interruptions of the repose of the community,⁷⁷ only those acts are forbidden which fall within such categories. tion it is held that a disturbance, within the meaning of this requirement, is any business which withdraws or distracts the attention of others from the appropriate observance of the day and turns it to other things,⁷⁸ regardless of whether the others thus affected assent or object to the performance of such business;⁷⁹ but elsewhere it has been held that no disturbance of the good order of society results where no disorder or interference with the religious rights of others is occasioned by the acts complained of.⁸⁰

Where the statute itself specifies particular acts which shall be regarded as disturbing the rest and repose of the day, the doing of any of the specified acts constitutes a disturbance, no matter how quietly the acts may be done.⁸¹

Presence of others. It has been held that a transaction may be to the disturbance of others although no one but the parties thereto were present;⁸² but a result to the contrary has been reached elsewhere under similar statutes.⁸³

Statutes prohibiting attendance at public meetings other than religious gatherings operate only against the spectators or auditors and have no application to the acts of those promoting or performing in such assemblies.⁸⁴

§ 9. — Acts Done in Exercise of Ordinary Calling

Acts repeated regularly in the course of trade, business, or labor are parts of the ordinary calling of one exercising such trade, business, or labor within a prohibition against pursuit of one's business or ordinary calling.

At common law the pursuit of one's ordinary calling on Sunday is not an offense;⁸⁵ and the fact that one engages in his usual calling on Sunday is not per se illegal,⁸⁶ but under some statutes the pursuit of one's business or the work of his ordinary calling, on Sunday, is prohibited.⁸⁷

When a statute is in terms addressed only to the performance of business in one's ordinary calling, acts not in the line of such usual employment are not forbidden.⁸⁸ Provided it is work of one's ordinary calling, it is immaterial that the work or business performed on Sunday is not at his usual place of business⁸⁹ or is not as active or constant as on week days.⁹⁰

Statutes directed against the performance of any worldly or secular business, employment, or labor whatsoever on Sunday are not confined to such business as is in the course of an ordinary calling;⁹¹ and a statute prohibiting the keeping open of a store is not limited to such persons as follow the calling of merchants or shopkeepers through the week, and does not affect their conduct in any manner different from that with respect to the conduct of others.⁹²

While a statute prohibiting "work, labor or business" on Sunday does not, it has been held, confine the prohibition to the doing of acts which constitute the customary business of the person doing them throughout the week,⁹³ nevertheless, the prohibition of the statute is confined to acts of a secular nature belonging to, or connected with, ordinary business or common worldly affairs of men generally, although they might not fall within the line of the daily business or occupation within which the particular person concerned is employed.⁹⁴

and does not embrace acts, although of a secular or temporal character, which do not form a part of the ordinary and usual business of mankind generally, but which are of an exceptional and occasional character not incidental to the ordinary transactions which constitute the common business of everyday life.⁹⁵

Those acts which are repeated regularly in the course of trade, business, or labor are parts of the ordinary calling of one exercising such trade, business, or labor.⁹⁶

A statute prohibiting the "exercising of any of the common vocations of life" on Sunday, acts of real necessity or charity excepted, prohibits the transaction of the regular business of insurer.⁹⁷

Acts on one or more Sundays. An act done on one Sunday alone is not the pursuit of one's business or the work of his ordinary calling on Sunday,⁹⁸ and the pursuit of a particular business on a single Sunday only by one who has at no other time engaged in it is not, of course, engaging in his ordinary calling.⁹⁹

On the other hand, where acts are repeated on successive Sundays, they become a part of a person's business or the work of his ordinary calling;¹ and a business may be an ordinary calling of a person if he regularly engages in it on several Sundays, although it appears that regularly throughout the week he follows another occupation and it does not appear that he follows that for which he is convicted.²

The common-law offense of exercising a common vocation of life on Sunday is not committed until it is carried on to such an extent as to create a nuisance,³ and a single violation of a statute prescribing a penalty for exercising any of the common vocations of life makes the offender liable only for such penalty, and no criminal action can be predicated thereon.⁴

§ 10. — Exceptions in General

Exceptions to Sunday laws will be given effect according to their terms, and only as to prohibitions in connection with which they are stated.

A legislative body, in regulating Sunday observance, must be allowed a wide field of choice in determining what shall come within the class of permitted activities and what shall be excluded;⁵ so, in the exercise of its police power, the legislature has the authority to except certain businesses from the law under such conditions as it deems proper;⁶ but a statute which unreasonably discriminates between persons similarly situated is invalid.⁷ Where a statute empowers municipalities to pass such ordinances as are not inconsistent with the laws of the state, a Sunday ordinance omitting the exceptions provided for in the state Sunday statute is invalid;⁸ and an ordinance providing for exceptions to its operation is not valid unless the exceptions bear some reasonable relationship to the public health, safety, morals, or general welfare.⁹ A statute¹⁰ or ordinance¹¹ exempting certain businesses and occupations on the theory that they are works of necessity is unconstitutional unless an implied exception of all works of necessity can be read into the statute or ordinance.

Whether an act done on Sunday comes within exceptions to the Sunday laws depends on the terms of the statute involved and the circumstances of the particular case;¹² if it does, it may be done on that day as lawfully as on any other.¹³

The enumeration of particular exceptions is conclusive against the existence of other exceptions.¹⁴ Exceptions stated in connection with some prohibitions, but not with others, are operative only as to those in connection with which they are stated, and the fact that a particular act might fall within the scope of such exceptions is immaterial as to the prohibitions with respect to which no exceptions appear.¹⁵

§ 11. — Necessity or Charity

- a. In general
- b. Necessity
- c. Charity

a. In General

Acts constituting works of necessity or charity, with-in exemptions from Sunday laws, cannot be classified, nor can any general rule be prescribed for determining them.

Exceptions to the operation of Sunday laws, in favor of works of necessity or charity allow the doing of all acts of necessity or charity, although of the character included in the general prohibition.¹⁶ The classification of acts which constitute works of necessity or charity, or the prescription of any general rule for their determination, is impossible.¹⁷ If a person has reasonable ground to believe that a case of necessity or charity exists and honestly acts under that belief and in furtherance of such a purpose, although he may be deceived or mistaken in fact, his act is within the exception.¹⁸

The performance of an act gratuitously as an accommodation does not necessarily make it a work of necessity or charity.¹⁹

It is immaterial that a work is one of necessity or charity where the acts or matters done or performed are prohibited without the statement of any exception in favor of necessity or charity, and such a circumstance does not relieve the person acting from the operation of the prohibition.²⁰

Promoting attendance at unlawful place. It cannot be a work for necessity or charity to promote attendance at a place of public diversion where it is unlawful for anyone to be present.²¹

b. Necessity

"Necessity," as a basis for exemption from Sunday laws, cannot be precisely defined, but is determined according to the facts of each particular case; absolute or physical necessity is not required, but convenience or profit is insufficient.

Whether or not a particular matter is a work of necessity must be determined in view of the particular circumstances involved²² and is ordinarily a question of fact,²³ or, at most, a mixed question of law and fact,²⁴ rather than purely a question of law. What constitutes "necessity" in this connection is incapable of exact or accurate definition;²⁵ the term is elastic and relative, and should be construed with respect to the conditions under which people live.²⁶

"Undoubtedly the word 'necessity' has a flexible meaning, broadening and narrowing according to the wants, needs, and customs of a particular community at a particular time."—Commonwealth v. McDonald, 32 Pa. Dist. & Co. 257, 263.

Generally speaking, the law regards as necessary that which the common sense of the country, in its ordinary modes of doing its business, regards as necessary.²⁷ It is not the intention of the law to impose onerous restrictions on, or add burdens to, the performance of any proper matter,²⁸ and, hence, necessity does not mean an absolute or physical necessity,²⁹ but rather a reasonable one;³⁰ nor is necessity limited to those cases of dangers to life, health, or property which are beyond human foresight or control,³¹ but a moral fitness or propriety of the work or labor done under the circumstances of the particular case is sufficient.³²

The necessity for the work must be real and urgent;³³ and the test is not whether it must be done at some time, but whether it must be done on Sunday.³⁴

Convenience, desirability, or profitability not criterion. Necessity in this connection is something more than that which is merely desirable.³⁵ The mere fact that the performance of a particular act or transaction on Sunday is a convenience,³⁶ or that its nonperformance will cause a degree of inconvenience or discomfort,³⁷ or that it is more profitable so to act than to adopt some alternative method of transacting business,³⁸ is not sufficient to make such act a work of necessity.

Necessity arising through act or negligence of party acting. In order to be within the exceptions, the necessity must be one which is not of the party's own creation³⁹ and not the result of unreasonable negligence or indolence on his part.⁴⁰

Foreseeable or avoidable character of act; emergency. Generally speaking, it has been said, the necessity ought to be an unforeseen one⁴¹ or, if foreseen, such as could not reasonably have been provided against;⁴² and thus a necessity which could be avoided by changes in the facilities or manner of transacting business or labor without an unreasonable expenditure of time or money is not such necessity as comes within the exception.⁴³ However, it is not required that the necessity be absolutely unavoidable, but it is sufficient that it could not reasonably have been avoided.⁴⁴ "Works of necessity" include emergencies.⁴⁵

Physical, economic, or moral necessity

(1) A practical definition is that the "work of necessity" excepted from operation of statute is not merely one of absolute or physical necessity, not merely something required to furnish physical existence or safety of person or property, but embraces as well all work reasonably essential to the economic, social, or moral welfare of the people, viewed in light of the habits and customs of the age in which they live and of the community in which they reside.—Francisco v. Commonwealth, 23 S.E.2d 234, 238, 180 Va. 371.

45. Miss.—White's Lumber & Supply Co. v. Collins, 191 So. 105, 107, 186 Miss. 659, suggestion of error

Acts incidental to other acts which are lawful. The mere fact that labor is necessary, under the circumstances, for the accomplishment of a generally lawful purpose does not render it a necessity within the exception;⁴⁶ the purpose itself, as well as the work done to accomplish it, can be lawful on Sunday only when, under the circumstances, there is a pressing and present necessity for its accomplishment on that day.⁴⁷ However, where the primary purpose of the act is a necessity under the statute, the work properly incidental to its accomplishment, as well as the immediate act itself, is a necessity.⁴⁸ It is the exigencies of the object to be accomplished that determine, to a great extent, the permissibility of the means to be resorted to for that purpose;⁴⁹ and thus the necessity may grow out of, and be incidental to, the particular nature of the business involved.⁵⁰

Necessity as dependent on character of party benefited by performance. Some authorities have held that the necessity contemplated in the statute is the necessity of the person working, and not that of the person for whom the work is done;⁵¹ but this distinction has been rejected by others,⁵² and the rule has even been stated directly to the contrary that the necessity does not spring from the motives which induce the actor to perform his work or business, but from the necessity of the person for whom it is performed.⁵³

A work of necessity, within the meaning of the statute, may be either that labor or business necessary to the person himself⁵⁴ or for the benefit of some other person affected by the necessity or emergency creating the condition,⁵⁵ or necessary to the community.⁵⁶

Acts to secure public safety. Any works required to secure the public safety are works of necessity.⁵⁷

Preservation or protection of property. Acts to preserve,⁵⁸ or to prevent a serious loss of,⁵⁹ property are within the exception. The rule is not limited to cases where the property is of great value,⁶⁰ although it does not extend to those where it is of insignificant value;⁶¹ the circumstances and wealth of the owner and the relative importance to him of the property are circumstances to be considered in determining the availability of the exception.⁶²

Legislative declarations as to necessity. Where the legislature itself has indicated a purpose to deal with any particular matter as a work of necessity, this legislative expression and definition of its character as such operates to require that the perform-

Assault held not in emergency

Where corporation's resident manager and general manager committed an assault in attempting, on Sunday, to compel corporation's debtor to execute a deed of trust, the relationship of employer and employee existed between corporation and managers, making corporation liable, although collection or settlement of debt was not a work of necessity and not an emergency.—*White's Lumber & Supply Co. v. ance of such a matter be treated as matter of necessity.⁶³

"Daily necessity." Where the exception is of services of "daily necessity," the qualifying word "daily" limits the exception to such acts as are required to meet a daily need;⁶⁴ but, where the exception is of works of necessity generally, it is not essential that the acts done shall have been works of daily necessity.⁶⁵

Charity as a basis for exemption from Sunday laws is to be understood in its ordinary sense. Convenience to another, or the dedication of proceeds to charity, does not bring an act within the exemption.

The term "charity" is intended to be understood in its ordinary sense⁶⁶ and to denote something more than mere almsgiving.⁶⁷ It is active goodness,⁶⁸ and includes everything which proceeds from a sense of moral duty, or a feeling of kindness and humanity, and is intended wholly for the purpose of the relief or comfort of another, and not for one's own benefit or pleasure.⁶⁹ Thus, ordinarily, the usual and necessary work connected with religious worship or reasonably incident thereto is work of charity.⁷⁰ However, a patriotic enterprise⁷¹ or an educational work⁷² is not necessarily a work of charity within the exception; nor are all acts done by corporations organized as "not for profit,"

To constitute an act of charity, the act done must itself be a charitable act, and the act of ascertaining whether a charity is needful is not sufficient.⁷⁴ Ordinarily, charity will not include the doing of an act for compensation or private gain.⁷⁵ In distinguishing what is done by way of charity from other acts, the motive, rather than the result, should be kept in view.⁷⁶ The mere fact that an act is a convenience to another does not render it a work of charity or mercy;⁷⁷ and not every gratuitous act done for another is an act of charity within the exceptions.⁷⁸

The word "charity," in this connection, means or connotes giving, and not receiving.⁷⁹ The dedication to charity of funds or proceeds raised by the transaction of prohibited acts or matters on Sunday is not of itself sufficient to bring such transactions within the exception of works of charity.⁸⁰

A negligent failure to perform an act of charity on a prior date does not affect the legality of its performance on Sunday.⁸¹

Pursuing ordinary calling; detached business

Within meaning of statute forbidding any person to pursue his business or work of his ordinary calling on the Lord's day, work of necessity or charity only excepted, the person himself must be engaged in an act which is itself charitable, or at least the enterprise for which he works must itself be engaged in acts which are themselves charitable, and a detached business, from which support for charitable enterprise is to be derived, is not exempt as a charitable enterprise; nor are the operators or employees of the detached business exempt.—Rogers v. when and to the extent to which a statutory exemption in their favor exists.

Persons observing a day other than Sunday may not, in the absence of statutory exemption in their favor, perform such acts as are forbidden by Sunday laws,⁸² and a provision that such laws shall not be construed to prevent the due exercise of the rights of conscience on their part does not alter the rule.⁸³ However, valid exceptions in statutes or ordinances in favor of such persons enable them to perform any acts generally forbidden to be done on that day with respect to which they are particularly excepted, without committing a violation of the Sunday laws by such conduct.⁸⁴

Exemption from particular stated restrictions or prohibitions does not relieve such persons from compliance with other prohibitions to which the exemption is not expressed to extend;⁸⁵ and, where the exemption is qualified, the qualifications must be met before it is available in defense of such persons.⁸⁶ Exceptions in favor of those observing another day are not applicable to persons who believe that the seventh day is the Sabbath, but do not observe it as such,⁸⁷ or to business corporations, since they are incapable of having religious sentiments.⁸⁸

a. Farmers

Various acts in connection with farming have been held works of necessity, while other acts have been regarded as prohibited by Sunday laws.

A farmer selling products of his farm at his farm on Sunday is not a merchant, grocer, or dealer in wares and merchandise, or a trader in any business, within a statute forbidding Sunday sales by such persons.⁸⁹

Various particular acts connected with the operation of a farm have been held, under all the circumstances, to constitute works of necessity,⁹⁰ as in the case of feeding animals⁹¹ and milking cows and disposing of the milk;⁹² but a contrary result has been reached in particular circumstances, as to the gathering of crops.⁹³

Under statutes prohibiting hunting on Sunday, it has been held that a farmer may not on that day hunt on his own premises unprotected animals or birds which are damaging his crops.⁹⁴

b. Gasoline and Motor Services

The sale of gasoline and services in connection with motor vehicles have variously been held within the prohibitions of Sunday laws or within exceptions thereto.

The sale of gasoline is within the prohibition of statutes against the selling of goods, wares, or merchandise on Sunday.⁹⁵ According to some authorities, the sale of gasoline and similar motor supplies is a work of necessity or mercy within the Sunday laws,⁹⁶ and the seller may sell to the public generally;⁹⁷ but there is other authority holding that the sale of gasoline on Sunday is not a work of necessity, as a matter of law or in the absence of special emergency,⁹⁸ at least where by statute certain places are particularly excepted from the prohibitions, at which the purchase might have been made instead of being made at the place where it was in fact made.⁹⁹

An exception in favor of livery-stable keepers is inapplicable to persons selling oil or gasoline.¹

Automobile wrecker service. The operation of an automobile wrecker service on Sunday is, it has been held, a work of necessity.²

Repairmen. The redelivery on Sunday to the owner of an automobile repaired on a week day is not forbidden by a prohibition of the pursuit on Sunday of one's ordinary calling;³ and, further, it seems that under the exception of works of necessity or charity, it might even be lawful to make repairs on that day in a clear case of emergency.⁴

Repair of premises of garage or service station on Sunday to enable the public to enter to procure gasoline and like goods is not a work of necessity.⁵

c. Making of Contracts Generally

The making of contracts on Sunday has been held within some prohibitions, such as that against business, but not within others, such as that against servile labor.

The making of contracts on Sunday is not prohibited by a statute forbidding servile laboring or working,⁶ or, as to contracts which are out of the usual line of one's employment, by statutes forbidding business in the exercise of one's ordinary calling,⁷ or, as to contracts privately made without disturbing others, by statutes forbidding labor which disturbs others.⁸ It has been held that the making of contracts on Sunday is not illegal under statutes respecting labor or "common labor,"⁹ but there is other authority holding that the making of ordinary contracts with respect to business and secular affairs is within the prohibitions of such a statute,¹⁰ although, even where such rule prevails, contracts not for private gain, but referring to the public morals and welfare, are held not to be prohibited.¹¹

The making of contracts is "business," however, within the purview of the Sunday laws;¹² and contracts referring to, and in the course of, one's usual occupation are business of one's ordinary calling,¹³ even though that calling does not consist of, or regularly involve, the making of contracts such as the one involved.¹⁴ Further, where the making of a contract disturbs others, it is within the prohibition of business in one's secular calling to the disturbance of others.¹⁵

Negotiations between a creditor and his debtor, it has been held, are neither necessary nor charitable, in the absence of some emergency,¹⁶ nor are such transactions as the payment of obligations¹⁷ or the making of loans.¹⁸

Subscription contracts. The solicitation of subscriptions or the promise to make them, for objects of charity, is a work of charity, within the statutory exceptions, and hence such transactions are not unlawful.¹⁹

d. Manufacturing and Similar Industrial Plants

Repair work in manufacturing or similar establishments may be a work of necessity, as may Sunday operation where continuous operation is essential to efficiency.

Repair work in manufacturing or like industrial establishments may come within the exception of works of necessity.²⁰ Moreover, where the nature of the business is such that operation, in order to be reasonably efficient, must be continuous, that circumstance may make Sunday operation a work of necessity within the law;²¹ but, where whatever need there is for continuous operation could readily be obviated by the adoption of an alternative method of doing business, without unreasonable expense, the fact that continuous operation is essential to the methods of business actually employed, is not sufficient to make it a necessity within the exception.²²

e. Newspapers

Activities in connection with newspapers have been held forbidden under various Sunday statutes; but such business has also been held a work of necessity.

The publication, issue, or circulation of newspapers on Sunday has been held to come within statutory prohibitions against doing labor, business, or work,²³ or forbidding the engaging in worldly employment or business.²⁴ According to some authority, such business is not a work of necessity;²⁵ but there is authority to the contrary.²⁶ When expressly excepted from the Sunday laws, newspapers may appear on that day as they do on any other;²⁷ and, where the sale of newspapers is exempted, transportation and delivery thereof are necessarily included.²⁸

The selling of newspapers on Sunday has been held to be within the terms of statutes prohibiting the sale of goods, wares, and merchandise²⁹ to the disturbance of others,³⁰ or the engaging in worldly employment or business on Sunday;³¹ and it has also been held not to be a work of necessity;³² but, whether or not the selling thereof is a work of necessity or charity, keeping open shop for such sales is an offense under statutes forbidding keeping open and making no exceptions to the prohibition.³³

f. Sales of Real Property

Sales or purchases of real property have variously been held within or not within the prohibitions of Sunday laws.

A private selling or offering for sale of real estate, at least where made in such manner as not to disturb the public rest and order, has been held not prohibited by a statute intended to prohibit the sale of commodities or merchandise.³⁴

Purchase of real estate on Sunday has been held illegal within statutory provisions prohibiting business on that day,³⁵ but the purchase of a home has been held not a "worldly employment" within a prohibitory statute,³⁶ but a work of necessity within an exception.³⁷

g. Selling Tickets or Taking Fees for Admission

Selling tickets, or taking fees for admission, has variously been held within or not within the prohibitions of Sunday laws.

The selling of tickets to sports or entertainments on Sunday is secular or worldly business, employment, or labor within the Sunday laws,³⁸ at least where it is done in such a fashion as actually to disturb others in the observance of the day;³⁹ but has been held not to be "servile labor."⁴⁰ Such sales have also been held to be within prohibitions of public selling or offering for sale of goods, wares, or merchandise,⁴¹ but, according to other authority, are not within a prohibition of "selling, offering, or exposing" commodities for sale.⁴²

The charging or taking of a required fee for admission is within the statutory prohibition of worldly employment or business,⁴³ even though the gathering for which such fee is required is a meeting for the conducting of religious services.⁴⁴ A seller of tickets for a place of amusement is liable under a statute directed against persons keeping open places of amusement on Sundays, or the agents or employees of such persons.⁴⁵

Selling tickets on Sunday for an entertainment on that day, at which it is unlawful for anyone to be present, is not a work of necessity or charity;⁴⁶ but taking tickets for a project justifiable as a work of necessity is itself matter of necessity within the exceptions.⁴⁷

h. Telegraph Companies

Telegraph companies have been held not allowed to transact a general business on Sunday, but may receive, transmit, and deliver messages referring to matters of necessity or charity.

Under statutes prohibiting labor, or servile labor or work, on Sunday, except for works of necessity or charity, or forbidding, subject to the same exception, the pursuit of one's usual avocation, or of work of one's ordinary calling, it is not per se unlawful to keep open on Sunday telegraph offices on established telegraph lines,⁴⁸ and transmit messages

While the telegraph company may receive, transmit, and deliver all messages referring to matters of necessity or charity,⁵⁰ not all telegraphy is a work of necessity as a matter of law,⁵¹ and telegraph companies, it has been held, may not transact on that day a general business as on other days.⁵² So, the transmittal of messages concerning ordinary business or social affairs has been prohibited.⁵³

Telegraph companies cannot, under statutes prohibiting Sunday labor, unless a case is brought within the statutory exceptions, employ Sunday as a day for establishing new lines,⁵⁴ or for putting in new offices on lines already established,⁵⁵ and the mere fact that it is desirable to do so on Sunday in order to lessen the hazard of accidents to trains depending on telegraph lines is not sufficient to show necessity where it does not appear that such trains could not be stopped on some other day long enough to accomplish the purpose without serious inconvenience or hindrance.⁵⁶

I. Tobacco, Cigars, Etc.

The sale of cigars or tobacco on Sunday, or keeping open shop for that purpose, has been held to come within various Sunday law prohibitions.

Sales of cigars or tobacco on Sunday are within statutes prohibiting business transactions,⁵⁷ engaging in worldly employment,⁵⁸ or offering or exposing for sale goods, wares, or merchandise,⁵⁹ and within statutes forbidding the pursuit of business or work of one's ordinary calling,⁶⁰ or the doing or exercising by any merchant, tradesman, artificer, laborer, or other person of any worldly labor, business, or work of his ordinary calling,⁶¹ where such sale is in fact in pursuance of the work ordinarily engaged in by the seller. The keeping open of a cigar stand and selling cigars or tobacco therefrom, to ordinary boarders and customers on Sunday, by a hotel keeper, is forbidden by such statutes,⁶² and it is a violation of Sunday laws against keeping open shop to continue the operation of an establishment for the sale of such commodities.⁶³

The sale of such articles on Sunday,⁶⁴ even to habitual users thereof,⁶⁵ has been held not to be a work of necessity or charity, as a matter of law, at least where they are not sales by hotel keepers to traveling guests who have had no opportunity to supply themselves for the day;⁶⁶ nor, conversely, is the purchase of such articles within those exceptions.⁶⁷ Further, such commodities are not within an exception permitting the sale of provisions,⁶⁸ nor, although they may perhaps be medicinal and properly capable of sale as such, under some circumstances, are they drugs, within the exceptions of the Sunday laws;⁶⁹ and the mere statement of the seller, although a druggist, at the time of sale, that he was selling them as drugs does not render the sale lawful.⁷⁰ It is not lawful to keep open shop for the purpose of making such sales within an exception, in the law against keeping establishments open, of those retailing drugs or medicines, where it does not appear that the articles sold in such establishment were intended as medicines or that the keeping open was to supply them for that purpose.⁷¹

It has been held that a restaurant keeper who keeps open in part for the purpose of supplying cigars or tobacco is, to the extent that the establishment is kept open for such purpose, guilty of violating statutes against keeping open shop.⁷²

j. Travel

Sunday travel is illegal only where made so by statute; travel for particular purposes has been held within or not within exceptions of acts of necessity or charity in statutes otherwise prohibiting Sunday travel.

Traveling on Sunday is illegal only in so far as it has been made so by statute, and travel not within any prohibition, or which is within the operation of some exception, is not forbidden.⁷³ Travel purely for pleasure⁷⁴ or for the purpose of visiting others⁷⁵ is not within a prohibition of work, labor, or business; nor is traveling to the dwelling of another to make a social visit a "game, play, or recreation" within acts forbidding such activities;⁷⁶ nor is riding or walking, although purely for pleasure, forbidden by prohibitions of "sporting."⁷⁷

Where the statutory prohibitions do extend to the travel involved, but an exception is made in favor of acts of necessity or charity, whether traveling on Sunday is within the exceptions of the statutes is dependent, to a considerable degree, on its moral fitness and propriety.⁷⁸ One who has traveled for a permitted purpose remains within the exception while returning, even though he does not take the same or the shortest route back if, from the route actually taken, it appears that his purpose throughout remains only that of returning and not that of diverging for a different and unexpected purpose.⁷⁹ Although the travel may have in its inception a permitted object, if a person diverges from that object and pursues another, which is not within the exceptions, the traveling from the time of such divergence is within the prohibition of the statute.⁸⁰ and acts necessary or incident thereto, are lawful as works of necessity.

A statutory exception in favor of works of necessity permits the operation on Sunday of plants for the supply to the public of water⁸¹ and light,⁸² and, further, permits the performance of acts necessary to secure the purity of the public water supply,⁸³ and of acts done as incidents to the operation and supply of such facilities, in maintaining the plant in good condition.⁸⁴ On the other hand, it does not permit the performance by public service companies or their employees, not directly engaged in operation of the plant, of acts only remotely incidental to such operation, where some alternative means of doing business could be adopted without unreasonably burdening such companies.⁸⁵

I. Other Acts or Transactions

Various other acts or transactions have been held within or not within the prohibitions of Sunday laws or exceptions thereto.

In addition to the acts and transactions considered supra this section various other acts and transactions have been considered by the courts to determine whether they are in violation of Sunday laws or come within the exceptions to such laws.⁸⁶

Attorneys. Even though it is within the prohibitions of the statute for an attorney to engage in his professional activities generally on Sunday, there are some services that an attorney may lawfully perform on Sunday, where the law expressly authorizes certain suits and other legal matters to be done on that day,⁸⁷ or under the exceptions of works of necessity and charity.⁸⁸

Gaming. A general prohibition against gaming on Sunday embraces every species of gaming for money;⁸⁹ and "gaming" has been held to include not only gambling which is illegal under other acts, but all gambling on Sunday of whatsoever kind;⁹⁰ and thus playing and betting at cards have been held to come within the meaning of a statute prohibiting a housekeeper from suffering gaming on Sunday,⁹¹ and a specific prohibition of card playing, either for wager or amusement, renders it immaterial whether the game was for the one or the other, the gist of the offense being the playing of cards for whatever purpose.⁹²

Gaming is not within the purview of prohibitions on common labor or the exercise of one's usual avocation,⁹³ nor is private playing at cards or dice within those statutes forbidding public exhibitions and spectacles.⁹⁴

Calling on householders, for the purpose of propagandizing religious views, however unwelcome such calling may be, does not constitute a desecration of the Sabbath or the disturbance of a private family within the statute.—State v. Mead, 300 N.W. 523, 230 Iowa 1217.

"Sabbath breaking" has been held to be distinguished by the terms of a particular statute from the offense of selling liquor on Sunday.—Seim v. State, 55 Md. 566, 39 Am.R. 419—State v. Popp, 45 Md. 432.

City limits

Under a statute prohibiting gaming for money within the limits of any city on Sunday, a person cannot be convicted for gaming at a residence outside the corporate limits, although the residence is on private ground adjacent to the city.—Borders v. State, Tex.Cr., 66 S.W. 1102.

Licensed businesses. The mere fact that a license has been granted to do certain acts or carry on a certain business does not exempt one holding such license from the necessity of complying with Sunday laws, where the acts or business in question are of such nature as to fall within the prohibitions of such laws;⁹⁵ and this is true even where the license is one granted by the United States.⁹⁶

Mines and oil wells. The operation on Sunday of fans and pumps to keep a mine free from gas or water is not a necessity, within the exceptions of the statutes, if it would be possible, without undue expenditure of time or money, to accomplish that object by a different construction of the mines or by the adoption of improved appliances.⁹⁷ Sunday operation of oil wells, if their continuous operation is required to prevent serious and permanent injury thereto, may be a necessity within the exception,⁹⁸ but it is not so if the failure to work therein on Sunday causes no serious loss but a mere inconvenience or delay;⁹⁹ and if, by pumping a part only of the day, the threatened injury might be avoided, there is no such necessity, within the statute, as will permit of pumping throughout the whole of the day.¹

Conditions may arise or exist in connection with the drilling of oil wells, which will render legal the performance of Sunday work with relation thereto.²

Miscellaneous professional or skilled services. Healing the sick or employing a physician to do so is within the exceptions in favor of works of necessity or charity.³ The work or employment of an undertaker is a matter of necessity within the purview of the Sunday laws.⁴ The operation of a photographer's studio has been held to be such work as is within a statute forbidding Sunday "labor."⁵

The giving of instruction to another on Sunday is not "labor," within the prohibition of a Sunday law.⁶

Services rendered a church as psalm reader, choir master, officiator at baptisms, and parochial teacher have been held valid as incident to the church's works of charity.⁷

Wills; disposition of property. The execution of a will has been held not to be "work, labor, or business" within the meaning of statutory prohibitions of such matters,⁸ nor is it forbidden under a statute prohibiting engaging in worldly business or employment on Sunday;⁹ and the drawing and execution of a will are not forbidden by statutory prohibitions of work, business, or labor of one's secular calling.¹⁰ It has, moreover, been suggested that the execution of a will might come within the exception of works of necessity or charity;¹¹ and the arrangements made by a dying man for the disposition of his property may well be found to come within the category of works of necessity.¹²

utes prohibiting work, or labor, or common labor,¹³ the doing or exercising of the common avocations of life,¹⁴ or engagement in "worldly employment or business" on Sunday.¹⁵ Barbering is prohibited by statutes forbidding any person to pursue his business or the work of his ordinary calling;¹⁶ and the keeping of a barber shop open for business is within statutory prohibitions against keeping any save certain enumerated places of business open for the purpose of transacting business therein.¹⁷ Of course, where there is a valid special prohibition of barbering, acts in the pursuit of that trade are illegal.¹⁸

However, barbering is not unlawful under a statute prohibiting the opening of any place of business for the purpose of trade or sale of goods, wares, and merchandise,¹⁹ and the mere keeping open of a barber shop, without performing any labor therein, does not violate a law against Sabbath breaking by keeping open stores or dram shops.²⁰ The open and public exercise of the barber trade on Sunday, it has been held, does not constitute a public nuisance.²¹

Although, under some circumstances, barbering may constitute a work of necessity or charity,²² in the absence of special circumstances barbering or the keeping open of a barber shop is not ordinarily to be regarded as being so as a matter of law;²³ and, where specially prohibited either absolutely or except under described conditions, it is, to the extent of such legislative prohibitions, excluded from matters constituting works of necessity.²⁴

ing and closing of barbershops on Sundays has been held valid.²⁵

Where the legislature has failed to grant barbers the right to engage in business on Sunday, by statutes forbidding certain acts, with specified exceptions, on that day, cities are authorized, under their general powers of government, to prohibit such work on Sunday by ordinances equally applicable to all within the same class.²⁶

b. Drug Stores

The extent to which drug stores generally, or sales of goods therein, are within exceptions to the Sunday laws depends on the language of the exceptions.

The operation by a druggist of a drug store on Sunday is within prohibitions of the pursuit of work or business of one's ordinary calling²⁷ or of keeping open shop.²⁸ Exceptions in favor of works of charity or necessity do not extend to all sales of drugs or medicinal preparations, merely by reason of their character as such, and such sales, when otherwise prohibited, are permitted to be made under such exceptions only when they are in fact matters of necessity or charity, under the circumstances as they exist.²⁹ So, if the exception to a prohibition of keeping open shop is only of works of necessity or charity, a druggist may not open his store or keep it open even where his sole purpose in doing so is the sale of drugs;³⁰ he may, in cases of necessity or on matters of charity, enter for the purpose of supplying drugs or medicines, but it is an offense for him to keep open shop to engage in the traffic of drugs or medicines generally.³¹

Shops where more than one kind of trade or traffic is pursued see supra § 7.

If, however, such a law excepts from its operation the sale of drugs, those who open shop for that purpose are not within its prohibition.³² If the exception in the statute is of druggists, without limitation as to the articles to be sold, the keeping open of drug stores is no offense.³³ In order for the exception to operate, the person acting must be a bona fide druggist and be bona fide engaged in keeping open a drug store,³⁴ but, if those facts exist, he is not limited to the sale of drugs but may lawfully sell articles of other descriptions from his stock in trade which he handles in connection with the drug store.³⁵ Where a statute prohibiting Sunday sales generally expressly excepts the sale of drugs and medicines, no offense arises from the selling of commodities capable of medicinal use for the purpose of being thus used.³⁶

An exception in favor of boarding houses, inns, and other houses of entertainment for sojourners and travelers does not operate as an exception of drug stores.³⁷

§ 15. — Buying and Selling Generally

Selling on Sunday has variously been held within or not within the prohibitions of Sunday laws, or exceptions thereto, according to the wording of the laws and the circumstances of the sale. Purchasing has been held not unlawful under some statutes.

Sales on Sunday were not prohibited at common law.³⁸ Statutes prohibiting public selling on Sunday,³⁹ or prohibiting such selling except in specified cases,⁴⁰ have been held valid; and municipal corporations may be empowered to prohibit the sale of particular merchandise on that day.⁴¹

Statutes prohibiting public selling or offering or exposing for sale on Sunday refer only to such acts as are public in character,⁴² and private casual sales are not prohibited by such statutes,⁴³ at least where the sales made have no tendency to produce a violation of the public order and solemnity of the day.⁴⁴ On the other hand, a private casual sale has been held within a prohibition of public traffic;⁴⁵ and even private casual sales, at which no one else is present, have been held to be the exercise of business in one's secular calling to the disturbance of others.⁴⁶ Advertising in Sunday newspapers, coupled with the provision of a service, on Sunday, for taking telephoned orders to be filled on Monday from unascertained goods, does not constitute public selling, or offering for sale, on Sunday.⁴⁷

Statutes prohibiting the exercise of one's ordinary calling on Sunday do not forbid sales of a kind different from that in which the seller is customarily engaged,⁴⁸ but do apply to tradesmen who engage in selling their ordinary wares on that day;⁴⁹ and selling may be within the prohibition of a statute forbidding the pursuit of one's usual avocation.⁵⁰ It has been held that casual private sales on Sunday do not constitute labor;⁵¹ but the contrary has been held as to engaging on that day in the business of selling.⁵² There is even some authority to the effect that buying and selling, or merchandising, comes within the language of regulations regarding "common labor;"⁵³ but according to other authority that term is exclusive of labor which is skilled by reason of connection with trade or commerce, and hence of sales by shopkeepers;⁵⁴ and similarly, it is held, whatever may be the meaning of "servile labor," it does not include the conduct of a dealer engaged in selling his wares.⁵⁵

A single sale from a store does not of itself constitute a violation of statutes against keeping open,⁵⁶ although, when coupled with the general requisites of such an offense, as discussed supra § 7, it is unlawful under such statutes.⁵⁷ Selling on Sunday is within statutory prohibitions on worldly employment or business,⁵⁸ and, of course, where the statute directly forbids the sale, barter, or disposition of goods, wares, or merchandise on Sunday, any sale of the designated articles on that day is against the law.⁵⁹

Work of necessity or mercy, within the statutory exceptions, may consist of a sale of property,⁶⁰ even though the purchase is for the purpose of resale;⁶¹ but the language of a statute may be such that necessity is not made a defense for the sale of personal property.⁶² It is not a necessity to buy anything on Sunday which by the exercise of proper care might be purchased the day before,⁶³ and sales, to be a matter of necessity, must be of things of which reasonable foresight would not require the purchase on some prior day.⁶⁴

Donation to charity of the proceeds from prohibited sales does not make the sales themselves matter of charity, within the exceptions.⁶⁵

sumption are not worldly employment or business, within the statutory prohibition,⁶⁶ the purchaser not being particeps criminis to the offense committed by the seller in making the sale,⁶⁷ even though the person purchasing is an agent employed by an organization to secure evidence to be used in prosecutions under the Sunday laws.⁶⁸ Nor do statutes forbidding selling on that day include within their prohibitions the act of purchasing, or render it unlawful to buy;⁶⁹ further, statutes prohibiting the exercise of one's ordinary calling do not render it unlawful to purchase, when the purchases made are not a part of or ordinary incident to the purchaser's calling.⁷⁰

Religious booklets. The distribution of religious booklets and the occasional receipt of small sums therefor, by members of a religious group, do not constitute "selling property," where the alleged sales are merely incidental and collateral to the main object of preaching and publicizing the doctrines of the order, and booklets were given free to those not desiring to contribute.⁷¹

Exposing for sale, within a statutory prohibition, consists of keeping and showing for the purpose of selling, or placing in view with the purpose and intention of selling.⁷²

erty on Sunday has commonly been held to be within general exceptions of works of necessity.

The operation of railroads or other public conveyances on Sunday has been held in particular cases to be within statutory prohibitions of labor,⁷³ worldly employment or business,⁷⁴ and compelling servants to labor;⁷⁵ and the operation of streetcars on Sunday, with the ordinary noise incident thereto, if it has a tendency to disturb any persons in the rest and repose of the day, has been held a breach of the peace.⁷⁶ While the applicability of the exception of necessity or charity has been held to depend on the purpose and nature of the travel or transportation in the particular case,⁷⁷ according to other authority, the exception in favor of works of necessity is held to permit the operation generally on Sunday of railroads,⁷⁸ street railroads,⁷⁹ or ferry boats,⁸⁰ the carrier being without any duty to inquire as to the character or purpose of the travel or transportation in order to be brought within this exception,⁸¹ the operation of which is, in this instance, utterly independent of such considerations.⁸² Transportation merely for pleasure, without any element of business, health, religion, or charity, such as the transportation of a purely pleasure excursion by boat or train, is not within such exceptions,⁸³ although even such transportation has been held within statutory exceptions in favor of the general Sunday operation of steam railroads.⁸⁴

An express statutory declaration on the matter

controls, so that where the operation of trains or other public conveyances is made an express exception to the general Sunday prohibitions, the carriers specified may lawfully operate on that day;⁸⁵ but where a specific prohibition of such operation exists, as, for instance, where the running of freight or excursion trains on Sunday is prohibited, it is in violation of law to operate such transportation agencies as are thus dealt with.⁸⁶

Permission or approval by railroad. Where the operation of trains falls within the statutory prohibitions, without being embraced by any of the statutory exceptions, the permission or approval of the railroad company is an essential ingredient of the offense;⁸⁷ express direction or approval of such operation, however, is not essential.⁸⁸ If the operation is by an authorized agent acting within the scope of his authority, the doing of the act, even though willfully, is sufficient to give rise to a suspicion of assent which, if corroborated by a showing of repeated acts of the same character, amply shows the assent of the company,⁸⁹ but such operation on a single occasion, especially if it is in violation of the express command of the company, does not make out the requisite assent.⁹⁰ However, the fact that the company has issued general orders to its employees not to run trains on Sunday, without also showing that in the particular instance the rules were violated without the sanction of the officer indicted, is not conclusive against the existence of assent or approval.⁹¹

Carrying persons traveling on necessary or charitable missions, as to religious services,⁹² or to visit the sick,⁹³ or other lawful necessary travel⁹⁴ is permitted under the exceptions of necessity or charity, and it is in fact doubtful whether, disregarding the exceptions, carriage to religious meetings is "worldly employment or business" at all, in the sense in which the statute prohibits such matters.⁹⁵

Other instances of transportation have been considered and held to be⁹⁶ or not to be⁹⁷ works of necessity or charity.

b. Services Incident to Traveling or Transportation

Various particular acts and services incident to the provision of facilities for travel or transportation have been held works of necessity within exceptions of Sunday statutes; other such acts or services have been held not within such exception.

Where travel or transportation on Sunday is legal any acts necessary in rendering such transportation available to members of the public are works of necessity,⁹⁸ although such acts are worldly employment or business within the statute.⁹⁹ Persons engaged in such work are not bound to inquire whether the travel is of the class permitted, nor is their freedom from liability dependent on the legality of the character of the travel in any particular case;¹ nor does an exemption by statute from the duty of furnishing such facilities on Sunday render them liable if, notwithstanding such exemption, they nevertheless attend to such business.²

These principles have been applied to lock keepers of canals,³ ticket sellers,⁴ and streetcar motormen,⁵ and to the inspection and repair of railroad cars,⁶ the repair of property essential to the lawful Sunday operation of trains,⁷ the coaling of locomotives employed in the transportation of livestock,⁸ and the switching of trains in the yards to prevent traffic congestion.⁹ Similarly, acts in the construction or maintenance of a transportation system which cannot be performed on week days without a disarrangement of schedule and consequent endangering of life and property have been held works of necessity,¹⁰ as have acts in pursuance of the duty of maintaining railroad premises or tracks in a safe condition,¹¹ or of protecting and preserving property delivered for carriage.¹²

Where, however, the acts involved are the services of persons employed by the several members of the public in their use of such transportation facilities, serving as agents of such persons and not of those furnishing the facilities, their conduct is within the prohibitions of such laws if the travel or transportation does not in fact come within the class permitted on Sunday and no particular ground of necessity exists;¹³ if there is some exigency requiring the immediate performance of the service, it is thereby rendered necessary and is no offense.¹⁴ Further, although done by persons employed by the person furnishing the facilities, acts are within the prohibitions of such statutes if the supplying or operation on Sunday of the particular facilities involved is illegal under the circumstances as they exist.¹⁵ Such employees, moreover, may be within statutory prohibitions on travel, while performing their services, their conduct in traveling being incidental only to their act in laboring, however, and being illegal to the extent that the labor they are performing is a violation of the Sunday laws.¹⁶

Even where particular acts in furtherance of travel are specifically prohibited, except in cases of necessity or charity, the prohibition on furnishing such facilities is not absolute, and such an act, if it falls within the exceptions, is permissible.¹⁷

Repairing highway or driveway. Repairing of public highways on Sunday, so as to prevent danger to the public, is a work of necessity;¹⁸ but it has been held that the repaving of a city street by one under contract to do so, but not on Sunday, and not acting at the instance of any official is not a necessity if the failure to act thus would not be in fact detrimental to the public.¹⁹

Repair of a private driveway into a place of business is not a work of necessity.²⁰

§ 17. — Furnishing Food or Refreshments

The furnishing of food or refreshments is within the prohibitions of various Sunday laws; but it may be removed from such prohibition by the operation of statute or ordinance.

The furnishing of food or refreshments is within the prohibition of various Sunday laws.²² However, isolated sales are not, it has been held, within a prohibition of labor.²³ Where a valid statute or ordinance exists specifically prohibiting or permitting the operation of a designated class of establishments or of business, or the sale of designated foodstuffs, its terms are controlling.²⁴

Where exceptions are made in favor of the sale of food, or meals, or certain designated articles and refreshments, refreshments not included in the exceptions may not be sold.²⁵ An exception permitting the dressing of meat or victuals in specified places has been held not to extend to the selling

A charter provision conferring power on council of city to regulate trades and business was a general rather than a specific power, with respect to validity of ordinance prohibiting Sunday sale of meats and foods.—Lo Tempio v. City of Niagara Falls, 2 N.Y.S.2d 103, 166 Misc. 338.

Mich.—People v. Derosé, 203 N.W. 95, 230 Mich. 180.

Absence of prohibition in state law

Fact that state law does not forbid selling of vegetables and produce on Sunday is not guaranty of right to do so even though forbidden by other valid laws and ordinances.—City of Shreveport v. Harris, 152 So. 330, 178 La. 685.

Sale between certain hours prohibited

Ordinance prohibiting sale of groceries between certain hours on Sundays held valid as against claim that it violated the vice and immorality statute; fact that ordinance did not include all hours of the day and all merchandise did not render it invalid or make lawful the sale of groceries before the first time of day mentioned.—Richman v. Board of Com'rs of City of Newark, 4 A.2d 501, 122 N.J.Law 180.

in the particular context, have been held to refer only to liquids and not to apply to cheese, bread, and butter.—State v. Cranston, 85 P.2d 682, 59 Idaho 561.

of intoxicating liquor in such places,²⁶ or of refreshments of any sort in places not in the classes specified by the statute;²⁷ but such an exception permits articles of food generally to be prepared and procured in the designated classes of places on Sundays,²⁸ and this has been held as to a wide variety of articles of food.²⁹ An exception permitting the sale of food includes animal food;³⁰ but an exception as to "farmers' markets" does not include a feed store selling to farmers.³¹ An exception of "confectionery" is not limited to candies;³² and an exception permitting the sale of "cooked and prepared foods" includes canned foods.³³

Work of necessity or charity. The furnishing of food or refreshments is not always, as a matter of law, a work of necessity or charity.³⁴ Keeping a grocery³⁵ or confectionery³⁶ store open on Sunday for the general transaction of business is not a work of necessity, whatever might be the rule with respect to particular sales of groceries, and this is so despite the fact that prepared foods for immediate consumption are incidentally sold in connection with the operation of such establishment.³⁷

Further, a statutory exception in favor of the sale of necessities does not permit the keeping open of a refreshment business, where a statute prohibits the opening of establishments for the reception of company;³⁸ but under a statute prohibiting the keeping open of groceries, but providing that it shall not be construed to prevent the sale of any provisions, keeping open a grocery for the purpose of selling provisions only is no offense.³⁹ Even if itself permitted on Sunday, the sale of refreshments cannot be used as a device to evade other Sunday laws and to permit the doing of acts generally prohibited on that day.⁴⁰

Restaurant or innkeepers. The preparation or furnishing by keepers of inns, restaurants, and the like, of food or refreshments to be consumed on the premises is a work of necessity within the statutory exceptions,⁴¹ and, according to some authority, this is so regardless of whether the purchasers are regular boarders or mere casual customers.⁴² There is authority to the effect that refreshments must be sold as a part of, or incident to, a meal and not separately in order to come within the exception,⁴³ and even authority holding that a restaurant keeper can dispense, by virtue of an exception in favor of those keeping hotels or restaurants, only such food or refreshments as he is authorized to sell by reason of his restaurant license.⁴⁴

A statute expressly prohibiting the sale of "drinks" makes it unlawful for restaurant keepers to sell on Sunday soft drinks and like beverages, even as an incident to a meal.⁴⁵ One who takes out a restaurant license merely as a blind in order to conduct his real business of selling beer is not immune from prosecution for following his usual vocation on Sunday.⁴⁶ Consumption of the food or refreshments on the premises is not ordinarily sufficient of itself to avoid the terms of the law where the act of supplying it is prohibited;⁴⁷ and it has been held that, although hotel and restaurant keepers may sell foods or refreshments to be consumed on the premises as incident to their general employment without violating the law, sales for consumption elsewhere are outside the scope of the hotel or restaurant businesses, and hence unlawful.⁴⁸ It has also been held that exemptions in favor of hotel or restaurant keepers are not personal exemptions but are intended to exempt the articles sold rather than the sellers, and that the sale of food for consumption on the premises, even though not by a restaurant or hotel keeper, is no offense.⁴⁹

§ 18. — Sports and Entertainments

- a. In general
- b. Moving pictures
- c. Outdoor sports and amusements

a. In General

Whether or not particular sports, amusements, or entertainments, or the operation of enterprises or establishments devoted thereto, will be held lawful on Sunday depends on the language of the applicable statutes.

Any entertainments and pastimes may be lawfully operated on Sunday which are not prohibited either in positive terms or by necessary implication, at least if they are not in their nature unlawful, immoral, or dangerous to public health or safety;⁵⁷ but amusements salutary or harmless in themselves, of a public character and attracting crowds of persons, may not comport with the order necessary to the due observance of the Sabbath.⁵⁸ "Games" and "contests," as used in a statute regulating the holding of Sunday games and contests, are very broad generic terms,⁵⁹ and should be given ordinary and usual signification.⁶⁰

Stage exhibitions and performances and the like have been held not to be within prohibitions of common labor;⁶¹ but the operation and management of a place of entertainment, such as a theater, on Sunday, has been held to be within a prohibition of Sunday labor, at least as to a manager personally directing such operation on that day,⁶² or other persons actually performing labor involved in connection with the presentation of any performance or entertainment,⁶³ or with furnishing facilities for the exercise of any pastime;⁶⁴ and the giving of shows and entertainments, if done within one's ordinary calling, comes within a statutory provision against engaging in one's usual avocation.⁶⁵ Moreover, causing employees to assist in the operation of an entertainment enterprise may be within the prohibition of compelling labor.⁶⁶ Similarly, the operation of an amusement enterprise for gain on Sunday is within a prohibition of the conduct of "work or business,"⁶⁷ or of engaging in worldly employment or business.⁶⁸ However, it has been held that the operation of a place of entertainment, even for gain, is not prohibited as a business where the statute specifically forbids certain businesses but does not include that particular kind of entertainment.⁶⁹

Statutes prohibiting the keeping open of places where sports or games of chance are carried on do not forbid or punish the use of sports or games on Sunday,⁷⁰ but they do make it unlawful to keep open places devoted to sports falling within the prohibition of the statute;⁷¹ and, similarly, statutes prohibiting the keeping open of a store, shop, or other place of business make it an offense for the manager of a theater to keep it open for business on Sunday.⁷² Under statutes of such character, however, it is the keeping open which is an offense, and the performances or exhibitions given in a place thus kept open are not offenses.⁷³

Statutes directed against sporting, playing, rioting, hunting, fishing, shooting, or the like on Sunday are properly to be confined, it has been held, to outdoor diversions, so that the giving of, or performing in, indoor spectacles, games, and entertainments is not prohibited under statutes of such a nature.⁷⁴ In order that the operation of any place of amusement may be prohibited under a statute operating against places of public entertainment or amusement to which admission is charged, it is required that a fee for admission be charged.⁷⁵ Statutes confined to those disturbing the public peace or good order of society do not prohibit the giving of theatrical performances, at a place removed from family dwellings, and in a manner not repugnant to public peace and order;⁷⁶ nor are shows so conducted as not seriously to interrupt the repose and religious liberty of the community within a statute forbidding public shows.⁷⁷

Under statutes prohibiting some or all stage performances on Sundays, every performance comprehended within the terms of the statute and not otherwise excepted is forbidden, either under its particular designation⁷⁸ or by necessary implication;⁷⁹ and every performer therein is a violator of the Sunday laws.⁸⁰ A statute making it unlawful to keep open or maintain a theater on Sunday is not directed toward the act of keeping open or maintaining the building called a "theater," but refers rather to the class of entertainment therein, or in some other manner, furnished.⁸¹

Exception; religious or charitable society. An exception in favor of entertainments by a religious or charitable society, the proceeds of which are to be devoted to a religious or charitable purpose, permits the exhibition on Sunday of any performance not otherwise improper by such a society for such a purpose,⁸² without rendering those in charge liable as Sabbathbreakers;⁸³ and the exception is applicable even though only the net proceeds, after deducting expenses, are to be applied to charitable or religious purposes.⁸⁴

Prohibition by cities. Where a statute only impliedly, and not expressly, permits theaters and shows to be open on Sunday, it is within the power of cities to pass ordinances prohibiting Sunday shows, and such ordinances are not in conflict with the statutes⁸⁵ or with the public policy of the state,⁸⁶ and are reasonable.⁸⁷ Prohibition of Sunday shows has been held a valid exercise of a city's police power;⁸⁸ an ordinance of this nature has been held not to conflict with a particular penal statute;⁸⁹ and, while a city's statutory authority to license shows for purposes of regulation does not carry with it the power to prohibit, the prohibition of shows on Sunday is only regulation, and not total prohibition.⁹⁰ On the other hand, such an ordinance has been held void as a special law.⁹¹ A municipality, under the general welfare clause of its charter, may provide that pool rooms conducted for public entertainment shall not be kept open on Sundays.⁹²

Concerts. Under a statute prohibiting concerts on the Lord's day except sacred music on the evening of the day, any concert at any time in the daytime of Sunday is prohibited.⁹³ Concerts, at least those consisting of secular music played by professional musicians, are within a prohibition of unnecessary labor.⁹⁴

Dancing. The legality of conduct in connection with dancing or dance halls is determined from the terms of the governing statute.⁹⁵ Dancing, not for the purpose of an exhibition or performance, but purely for the private amusement of the dancers, in quarters to which the public is not admitted or fees collected, has been held not forbidden by statutes prohibiting dances conducted as entertainments of the stage;⁹⁶ and operating a dance hall is not within statutes against "servile labor."⁹⁷

It has been held that a municipal corporation may forbid dancing on Sunday,⁹⁸ but it has also been held that, in the absence of express legislative authority, a municipality has no power to declare public dancing on Sunday unlawful.⁹⁹

Penny arcade. The operation of a penny arcade on Sunday is prohibited, it has been held, under a statute forbidding merchants, billiard table or ten-pin alley keepers, or other dealers to keep open on Sunday;¹ but it is legal under statutes prohibiting

b. Moving Pictures

- (1) In general
- (2) Referendum; election

(1) In General

Apart from laws expressly authorizing or prohibiting moving pictures on Sunday, the construction of various Sunday statutes as to the legality of such exhibitions is not uniform. They have generally been held not works of necessity or charity.

The exhibition of moving pictures has been held within the application of acts forbidding generally the giving on Sunday of theatrical representations or performances,³ the exhibition of "plays of any kind,"⁴ the keeping open of places of public amusement, which are defined as "circuses, theatres, variety theatres and such other amusements as are exhibited and for which an admission fee is charged,"⁵ or the operation of theaters,⁶ playhouses,⁷ or shows.⁸ Also, to the same extent and in the same manner as other places of entertainment generally, moving picture houses have been held subject to statutory provisions with respect to "labor,"⁹ or "business,"¹⁰ or keeping open places of business.¹¹ Likewise, managing a moving picture theater conducted for gain has been held to be engaging in worldly business or employment,¹² and a Sunday exhibition of movies for the purpose of gain has been held to be the carrying on of a trade or calling.¹³

There is other authority, however, holding that such exhibitions are not within statutory prohibitions of theatres,¹⁴ playhouses,¹⁵ or labor,¹⁶ servile labor,¹⁷ or trade requiring the exercise of manual labor;¹⁸ and moving pictures are not within the prohibitions of statutes forbidding entertainments of the stage,¹⁹ or the operation of billiard rooms, ball or pin alleys, baseball grounds, or other places of amusement.²⁰

The authorities are in conflict as to whether such exhibitions are prohibited under statutes forbidding "shooting, hunting, fishing, playing, horse racing, gaming or other public sports, exercise or shows," some holding them not to be included within the prohibitions where they are exhibited indoors.²¹ Moving pictures, when so exhibited as not to disturb the repose or religious liberty of the community, are not forbidden by prohibitions of public shows.²² If the Sunday laws expressly authorize the exhibition, such conduct is lawful,²³ and,

In Kentucky

(1) While laws prohibiting the operation of moving picture shows on Sunday are constitutional, under the 1934 amendment to Ky.St. § 131, the

on the other hand, where they expressly prohibit moving pictures, their exhibition is unlawful;²⁴ or such exhibition may, by the terms of the statute or ordinance, be permitted only during specified hours.²⁵ If the exhibition is itself unlawful, it is not made otherwise by the fact that it is given in connection with, or as an incident to, another business whose operation on Sunday is permitted under an express exception.²⁶ Even though the prohibition of the statute is absolute, and not confined to exhibitions given for purposes of gain, the fact that an exhibition is of that character tends rather to aggravate than to diminish the offense.²⁷

The operation of a moving picture theater on Sunday as a nuisance is discussed in Nuisances § 30.

Admission fee. There is authority to the effect that, where the circumstance of an admission fee is an element in the offense, the operation of the statute cannot be evaded by resorting to a device or subterfuge by which admission is in reality collected, although in form not as such.²⁸

Work of necessity or charity. The operation of a moving picture show is not a work of necessity, charity, or comfort, within the exceptions to the operation of such shows is not to be construed as work, labor, trade, business, or calling, within the meaning of the Sunday closing law; a municipal ordinance prohibiting such operation is invalid as counter to the statute; and an ordinance requiring shows of this nature to close at six P. M. on Sundays is arbitrary and unreasonable.—City of Harlan v. Scott, 162 S.W.2d 8, 290 Ky. 585.

(2) Prior to the amendment, the operation of such shows on Sunday was held unlawful as in violation of the statute.—Strand Amusement Co. v. City of Owensboro, 47 S.W.2d 710, 242 Ky. 772—Strand Amusement Co. v. Commonwealth, 43 S.W.2d 321, 241 Ky. 48—Capital Theater Co. v. Commonwealth, 199 S.W. 1076, 178 Ky. 780.

(3) The Sunday law applied only to operators of picture shows, and not to spectators; neither common nor statutory law forbids attending picture shows on Sunday in orderly, peaceful, manner, any prohibition to that effect being unconstitutional.—Commonwealth v. Phoenix Amusement Co., 44 S.W.2d 830, 241 Ky. 678.

(3) Prohibitory ordinance held within power of city and not in conflict with state law.—Blackledge v. Jones, 41 P.2d 649, 170 Okl. 563.

(4) In the exercise of the discretion delegated to village councils by statute, they may ordain that there shall be no public exhibitions of moving pictures within the village on Sundays; such an ordinance is not aimed to secure the observance of the Sabbath day, but to regulate the business, and is not in conflict with the general law or public policy of the state.—Power v. Nordstrom, 184 N.W. 967, 150 Minn. 228, 18 A.L.R. 733.

(5) An ordinance prohibiting the giving of moving picture shows on Sunday was held not an unreasonable exercise of the power to regulate such shows, in view of the gathering of crowds and the consequent necessity of police protection, the disturbance of the quiet of other members of the community, and the fact that the observance of Sunday is one of our established customs.—*City of Ames v. Persons within prohibition

(1) Manager and employees all held liable for illegal operation of show after specified time.—Paramount-Richards Theatres v. City of Hattiesburg, 49 So.2d 574, 210 Miss. 271.

(2) The word "person" in such statute includes "employees," and the words "person" and "agent" in the provision imposing penalty on any such "person" or "agent" of corporation or partnership responsible for illegal exhibition includes all persons who in some manner participate, aid, or do any act in aid of the exhibition, whether engaged in a proprietary or managerial capacity or in merely ministerial duties as agents or employees, hence, the statute applies to the cashier and projectionist at a theater, notwithstanding it is operated by a partnership, and employees, as well as the owner, are subject to the fine provided for by the statute.—Commonwealth v. Albano, 82 A.2d 682, 169 Pa.Super. 462.

(3) Where exhibitions are repeatedly held on Sunday under circumstances from which it is apparent that there is a concert of design and definite collusion between the parties, all parties involved are subject to prosecution, even though some did not actively participate in every detail of the illegal act.—Commonwealth v. Engel, 76 Pa.Dist. & Co. 521, affirmed Commonwealth v. Albano, 82 A.2d 682, 169 Pa.Super. 462.

Sunday laws,²⁹ and this has been held to be true even though part of the proceeds of the performances on that day is to be donated to charity.³⁰ Likewise, employees of a motion picture theater, doing on Sunday the same work, for the same pay, as on other days, have been held not to be engaged in work of charity, so as to be exempt from prosecution for pursuing the work of their ordinary calling on Sunday, even though the net proceeds of the day's performances go to charity;³¹ but the contrary has also been held.³²

Religious pictures. Since a "moving picture show," in the sense of Sunday enactments, is a place where motion pictures are exhibited for the purpose of amusement and entertainment, the prohibition does not extend to religious moving pictures which are used in connection with, and as a part of, religious services without any element or purpose of amusement or entertainment;³³ but the prohibition of a particular statute has been held to extend to the exhibition of a motion picture depicting scenes from the life of Christ.³⁴

Tax on admissions. An ordinance imposing a tax on admissions to motion picture theaters on Sunday, none being imposed on weekday admissions, is unreasonable.³⁵

(2) Referendum; Election

Referendum or election proceedings on the question of Sunday moving pictures must conform to the requirements of such proceedings generally.

A statute providing for a referendum by the electors of any municipality on the question of the exhibition of motion pictures on Sunday is governed by general principles of statutory construction.³⁶ Under governing statutes, it has been held that such a referendum may not be held within five years of a like referendum;³⁷ and a city whose charter permits initiative and referendum may hold a referendum on the question, under a statute permitting such showing if authorized by a majority of the "legislative council."³⁸ Where a statute vesting in the common council of a municipality the power to decide the question of Sunday motion pictures gives the council no authority to submit the question to the electorate, a resolution of the common council providing for such election is void and without effect,³⁹ and a referendum in such circumstances may be unconstitutional.⁴⁰

All the safeguards which the law has placed around nomination petitions to insure their genuineness have also been placed around petitions for this purpose;⁴¹ so, the signatures to the required petition must be appropriately verified.⁴² A petition for such referendum has, in particular circumstances, been held filed in time, valid despite failure to number the sheets consecutively as required by law, certified according to law, validly and properly circulated during the period prescribed by law for the circulation of nomination petitions, and in compliance with the law with respect to the addresses given by the signers.⁴³ A petition seeking to set aside a referendum petition of this nature will be dismissed where the objections are not specifically set forth and are not filed within the time required by law.⁴⁴

A referendum election for this purpose is invalid and ineffective where the voters of a voting precinct had no opportunity to vote, because of the oversight of officials, particularly where there is a sufficient number of voters in that precinct to have changed the result.⁴⁵

Attack on validity; fraud. A proceeding in equity has been held the proper method of attacking the validity of the referendum or election.⁴⁶ Where it is conceded that no fraud was committed at the election, it will not be declared void on the ground that the carelessness of election officers made fraud possible.⁴⁷ Similarly, in the absence of any charge of fraud, inability to locate, or explain the loss of, several ballots does not invalidate the election, even though that number of votes would have been sufficient to change the result.⁴⁸

c. Outdoor Sports and Amusements

(1) In general

(2) Baseball

(1) In General

The legality or illegality of outdoor sports and amusements on Sunday is determined by the language of the controlling statutes, and is affected by such factors as their commercial character.

Outdoor games and pastimes, conducted in an orderly fashion not calculated to disturb the rest or devotion of others, are not prohibited by provisions forbidding persons to practice on Sunday any unlawful sports or diversion,⁴⁹ or to engage in public sports, shows, and exercises.⁵⁰ A prohibition of public sports, games, or shows excludes from its operation those which are of a purely private character.⁵¹ Statutes prohibiting horse racing, cock-fighting, card playing, or games of any kind on Sunday are confined in operation to games which, like those named, are primarily games of chance, having a distinct immoral tendency, and do not prohibit athletic sports or exercises on that day.⁵²

Statutes prohibiting worldly employment and business on Sundays have been held prohibitory of commercialized athletic contests and expositions,⁵³ and of the operation of fairs and expositions, to which admission is charged,⁵⁴ even though, as an incident to their daily opening, religious services are held on the grounds;⁵⁵ in like manner, the amusements and recreations within the exposition grounds are unlawful.⁵⁶ It has been declared, by way of dictum, that philanthropic and public projects, such as parks and concerts, not otherwise violative of Sunday laws, are not rendered so by the collection of admission fees to meet the expense of such projects.⁵⁷

has been held authorized to enact an ordinance prohibiting the conducting of an amusement park on Sunday;⁵⁸ and an ordinance prohibiting the operation of a merry-go-round on Sunday has been held valid under the general welfare, or police power, clause contained in a statute and a statute empowering a municipality to pass ordinances to prevent and suppress breaches of the peace and disorderly assemblages.⁵⁹

Suspension of prohibition by municipality. A statute prohibiting baseball or football games during certain hours on Sunday, but authorizing the electors of any municipality, by election, to determine whether the prohibition shall be suspended in such municipality, is constitutional.⁶⁰

Aërial exhibitions. An exhibition of aviation as a spectacle at an amusement park on Sunday has been held to be within a prohibition of labor;⁶¹ and so has a balloon ascension conducted in like manner.⁶²

Hunting, shooting, or fishing. In the absence of a statutory prohibition applicable thereto, fishing on Sunday is not unlawful.⁶³ Under statutes by which hunting, shooting, or fishing on Sunday is expressly designated as an offense, the very performance of the act itself, and not the character or result of the act, is the matter comprehended.⁶⁴ The language and purpose of such statutes are to forbid all shooting, hunting, or fishing, as the case may be, on Sunday, save such as comes within exceptions applicable thereto.⁶⁵ Such an operation has been given to statutes prohibiting hunting, fishing, shooting, "or other public" sports, exercises, etc.;⁶⁶ but it is held that, under such statutes, the enumerated acts must themselves be public before their commission is an offense, and that private hunting, shooting, etc., are not forbidden.⁶⁷ Within a statute prohibiting willful or wanton shooting, the shooting must be of that character, and the mere fact that it was not actually in defense of person or property is not such as to make it unlawful.⁶⁸

Statute as game law and not Sunday law

Statute prohibiting hunting and shooting on Sunday, is a game law looking to the protection of game, and not a Sunday law to enforce proper observance of the day.—State v. Gillette, 120 A. 567, 98 Conn. 702.

Killing crop-destroying animals

(1) Hunting by farmer of crop-destroying birds and animals, not protected by statute, on his own land, has been held prohibited under such a statute, at least where by another statute the right to destroy protected animals found damage feasant is accorded "except on Sunday."—Walter v. State, 16 Ohio Cir.Ct. N.S., 523.

(2) Statute, prohibiting shooting and hunting on Sunday is entirely harmonious with a law allowing owners of land to shoot or otherwise kill certain quadrupeds and birds when destroying crops on their land, since such acts cannot be considered hunting.—State v. Gillette, 120 A. 567, 98 Conn. 702.

(2) Baseball

Sunday baseball has been held legal under some laws and illegal under others; its legality is affected by such factors as whether a charge is made for admission.

Where there are statutory provisions dealing in terms with Sunday baseball, as, for instance, prohibiting it wholly or to some extent, the legality and consequences of the act are determined by the provisions of such legislation.⁷⁹ Although Sunday baseball is per se an offense under some statutes,⁸⁰ it is not, under the statutes of most jurisdictions, unlawful of itself.⁸¹ Where every indictable misdemeanor is regarded as a breach of the peace, the playing of baseball on Sunday in such manner as to violate the laws on Sunday observance is a breach of the peace;⁸² but elsewhere, unless accompanied by some actual disturbance of the peace and good order of the day, it is held not to constitute disorderly conduct or a breach of the peace.⁸³

According to some authority, participation in a baseball game as player or manager has been held not to be within statutory prohibitions of labor, even though the game is one to which the public is invited and for which a fee is charged,⁸⁴ or within a prohibition of "attending" a public meeting;⁸⁵ but, according to other authority, the engaging in a game of baseball by an umpire⁸⁶ or a professional player⁸⁷ is "laboring" at a "trade or calling," within the terms of a Sunday law forbidding such conduct.

If conducted for profit by corporations or others organized for that purpose or participated in by players to whom playing is a regular occupation, baseball games are unlawful under laws prohibiting engagement in worldly business or employment of one's ordinary calling on Sundays;⁸⁸ but, under such statutes, amateur or semiprofessional baseball games, carried on at such places as will not interfere with Sunday rest or worship, without the charging of admission or other commercialization of the sport, have been held not unlawful,⁸⁹ al-athletic events, games, and contests on Sunday under permit from municipality or county.—Brown v. Akin, 56 S.E.2d 277, 206 Ga. 153—Brown v. Akin, 57 S.E.2d 242, 80 Ga.App. 712.

(2) The statute prohibiting person from pursuing his business or work of his ordinary calling on Lord's day except in cases of work of necessity or charity is not repealed by act permitting holding of athletic events, games, contests and showing of motion pictures on Sunday, but statutes should be construed in pari materia, and as thus construed the act merely restricts types of business provided for in the statute; so, one whose ordinary calling was operation of automobile race track could operate his track on Sunday.—*Worley v. Statute as to government forts or bases

Where the federal Selective Training and Service Act had been passed before general assembly enacted statute providing that for two years it should be lawful to exhibit publicly, and to engage in, athletic sports from and after 2 P. M. on Sunday in counties wherein United States government has established and maintains army forts, naval or marine bases, an army "fort" includes an army "air base," but where government was in possession of land obtained as site for such base, construction of base was about sixty to seventy-five per cent completed, and there were no army planes, officers, men, or equipment of Army Air Corps on the site, the base was not "established and maintained" within statute, and, therefore, permanent injunction restraining sheriff and deputies from interfering with Sunday baseball would not be granted.—Greenville Baseball v. Bearden, 20 S.E.2d 813, 200 S.C. 363.

though there is authority to the contrary.⁹⁰ Public professional baseball has been held illegal under statutes prohibiting being present on Sunday at any "dancing or public diversion, show, or entertainment," or taking part in "any sport, game or play."⁹¹

Under prohibitions of public sports, exercises, and shows, the game is not illegal unless played in such a manner as to interrupt the repose and religious liberty of the community,⁹² and has been held not to be unlawful where no admission is charged and no invitation to attend extended to the public,⁹³ even though it is played in a place where it is possible for members of the public to witness it;⁹⁴ but, under such statutes, baseball games on Sunday, to which the public is invited and for which an admission fee is charged, are unlawful;⁹⁵ and there is authority to the effect that an invitation to the public, even without the requirement of an admission fee, renders the game unlawful,⁹⁶ at least where it is conducted for gain.⁹⁷ The fact that the proceeds are to be donated to charity does not, it has been held, make the game any the less unlawful.⁹⁸

Baseball playing has been held not to be included within Sunday laws directed to a prohibition of games of chance or similar immoral tendency on Sunday,⁹⁹ or the keeping open of places of "public amusement," when that term is defined elsewhere in the statute as "circuses, theaters, variety theaters and such other amusements as are exhibited and for which an admission fee is charged."¹ Public baseball is included as a game within the operation of general provisions applying to the "public exhibition of any entertainment, play, opera, circus, animals, gymnastics, game, or dance or dances, or vaudeville performance" on Sunday;² and games by professional players to which the public is invited are within a prohibition of "unlawful" games, sports, or diversions, although no admission is charged and no excessive noise or disturbance results.³

Where the collection of fees for admission is not made an essential element in the offense by statute, the playing of a baseball game may be a violation of the Sunday laws, even though the public is admitted free of charge to the game.⁴ Where the collection of an admission fee is a material circumstance to the existence of the offense, the operation of the law may not be evaded by collecting such a fee in an indirect fashion,⁵ and there is authority holding even a solicitation of voluntary contributions from spectators sufficient for this purpose;⁶ but elsewhere, unless it is a mere subterfuge for an admission fee, the taking up of a voluntary collection from the spectators in an orderly manner is held insufficient to render the game unlawful.⁷

Necessity or charity. Whether a particular baseball game is within exceptions of necessity or charity, so expressed as to extend to the prohibition under which such games are forbidden, is to be determined by the circumstances under which it was played.⁸

B. ENFORCEMENT OF REGULATIONS

§ 19. Prosecutions for Violation of Criminal Statutes

Prosecutions for the violation of Sunday laws are governed by the provisions of the particular statutes and by the laws applicable to trial of other offenses generally which are of a similar character.

Prosecutions for violation of the Sunday laws are triable in such manner⁹ and before such courts¹⁰ as those laws specifically provide or as are proper to the trial of other offenses generally which are similar in character to those resulting from Sunday violations. The performance of one act may constitute an offense against a state and another offense against a municipality, and be separately punishable under either aspect.¹¹ Acts done on Sunday must, in order to sustain a criminal prosecution and be subjects of indictment, be made criminal by statute since Sabbath breaking is no offense at common law.¹² Prosecutions cannot be founded on statutes purely permissive in terms.¹³

Under the terms of the particular statute the performance of successive or repeated acts on Sunday may constitute a single offense,¹⁴ while under other statutes each act may be a separate offense.¹⁵ However, if a series of acts, although capable of constituting a series of offenses, is considered and treated by the state as but one offense, defendant cannot complain, at least where he is not prejudiced thereby.¹⁶ Violations on successive Sundays constitute separate and distinct violations rather than a continuing offense.¹⁷

It is no defense to a prosecution under a Sunday law that defendant was ignorant of the law,¹⁸ particularly where defendant has been prosecuted for previous violations,¹⁹ or that the authorities have, in the past, failed to enforce it against other violators.²⁰

§ 20. — Complaint, Indictment, or Information

- a. In general
- b. Issues, proof, and variance

a. In General

The complaint, indictment, or information must be in proper form and must state the facts which constitute the offense with sufficient certainty reasonably to apprise the defendant of the exact nature of the accusation.

The rules applicable to the sufficiency of indictments, informations, or complaints generally have been applied in connection with offenses against the Sunday laws, both as regards the formal requisites thereof²¹ and the statement of the offense sought to be charged.²² The indictment, information, or complaint must embrace all the elements of the offense as defined by the statute under which the prosecution is brought and the decisions construing it, or it will be deemed insufficient;²³ it should state the facts which constitute the offense with sufficient certainty reasonably to apprise defendant of the exact nature of the accusation;²⁴ and it must be sufficiently certain that, in case of conviction, the court may determine what punishment should be imposed.²⁵ However, the statement of facts sufficient to show the gist of the offense is all that is required, and attending facts and circumstances, which are not essential ingredients of the offense, need not be alleged,²⁶ although there is some authority holding it insufficient merely to allege all the elements of the offense and requiring further that a description of the offense, that is, the facts of the transaction, should be given.²⁷ It is not a fatal objection to an indictment, information, or complaint that it sets out the offense with more particularity than is necessary.²⁸

Where the violation of a Sunday law becomes an offense only when it is repeated on a sufficient number of Sundays to become a common-law nuisance, the information must allege the commission of the act not only on a particular Sunday but on a succession of Sundays.²⁹ Affidavits which are void will not support a prosecution,³⁰ but a mere formal clerical defect will not have such effect.³¹

Date or time. While it must be affirmatively alleged that the act complained of was performed on a Sunday,³² the particular Sunday is not important, provided it is within the statute of limitations.³³ It is not sufficient to allege that the acts were committed "on or about" a named date, although such date is on a Sunday,³⁴ unless it is directly and definitely charged that the acts were done on Sunday.³⁵

An indictment is sufficient which alleges the commission of the offense on Sunday, but which fails to state the date;³⁶ and it has been held that an allegation that acts were done on Sunday is sufficient, even though it further designates a date which did not in fact come on a Sunday;³⁷ but according to other authority an indictment referring specifically to a date which did not fall on Sunday is bad.³⁸ An indictment naming the day of the month and year but not alleging that it was Sunday has been held good at least where it further alleges that defendant on that day performed certain acts on Sunday, as the court will take judicial notice that the date named was Sunday;³⁹ but there is other authority reaching a contrary result, at least where the indictment does not anywhere in its language expressly mention Sunday.⁴⁰

Place. The place where the alleged offense was committed must be set out in the indictment, information, or complaint so as to render the venue ascertainable.⁴¹

Intent. According to some authority an indictment for keeping open a store or shop on Sunday must aver a criminal intent or purpose;⁴² but there is authority to the contrary.⁴³

Charging language of statute. Generally, an indictment which charges the offense in the language of the statute is sufficient;⁴⁴ it is not essential to use the precise language, provided the substance of it is embraced in the words used.⁴⁵ Where the acts alleged to have been done could have been for a lawful purpose, it is not sufficient to charge in the language of the statute without alleging the purpose for which the acts were done.⁴⁶

Negating exceptions. It is generally held that exceptions appearing in the enacting part of the statute and forming part of the description of the offense must ordinarily be negated by particular allegations,⁴⁷ but that need not be done as to exceptions appearing elsewhere, as in a proviso to the statute, or the like;⁴⁸ but, according to other authority, a negative averment to the matter of an exception in a statute, however stated, is not requisite unless such matter enters into and becomes a part of the description of the offense, or a qualification of the language defining or creating it;⁴⁹ but, if it is so related to the offense, the exception must be negated.⁵⁰ An allegation negating an exception which is not required to be negated has been held to be mere surplusage.⁵¹

In a prosecution for violation of the Sunday laws, the proof must correspond with the allegations of the indictment.

In general the proof must correspond with the allegations of the indictment.⁵² A real variance must exist between the allegations and the proof in order to give rise to any rights based on the theory of a variance,⁵³ and the variance, in order to be fatal, must be material.⁵⁴ A variance between pleading and proof on an allegation which is mere surplusage is not fatal.⁵⁵ The proof need not be as broad as the charge in the indictment, provided a distinct violation of the law is shown.⁵⁶ An offer, by defendant, of proof of intended matter of defense may be properly rejected where the evidence, if received, would not tend to establish a defense.⁵⁷ Affirmative testimony as to the commission of the act charged has been held to control over negative testimony as to defendant's general habits on Sunday.⁵⁸ Proof by the state that defendant was not a regular druggist is sufficient to take defendant out of the protection of an exception as to sales by regular druggists, on written prescriptions by a physician for medical purposes, without any testimony relative to prescriptions.⁵⁹

Time. The state is not limited in its proof to a particular date, but may show a violation of the law on any Sunday preceding the finding of the indictment and within the statute of limitations,⁶⁰ and a variance between the date charged and the one proved is immaterial.⁶¹

§ 21. — Evidence

- a. Presumptions and burden of proof
- b. Admissibility
- c. Weight and sufficiency

a. Presumptions and Burden of Proof

All facts material to the existence of the offense charged must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt by the state.

Subject to statutory provisions respecting the effect of an absence of evidence, the state is required to prove beyond a reasonable doubt all the facts material to the existence of the offense charged;⁶² but facts properly inferable from those proved need not be established by direct evidence.⁶³ That which must be stated in the indictment as part of or a necessary description of a Sunday violation must be proved by the prosecutor,⁶⁴ and only that;⁶⁵ and hence, when the state makes out a prima facie case by showing performance on Sunday of prohibited acts, not apparently within the exceptions, the burden of going forward to show that the acts were in fact within the statutory exceptions then rests on defendant.⁶⁶

On proof of the matters charged, it is held, the law presumes a criminal intent,⁶⁷ and the burden is then cast on defendant to show that the act comes within the exception to the statute.⁶⁸ Where permitting the doing of certain acts on Sunday is an essential element of the offense, the state must show such permission.⁶⁹ Where a principal is sought to be made criminally liable for the act of his agent, either knowledge of, or assent to, the act, on his part, must be shown,⁷⁰ or such an habitual recurrence of the act that his assent is implied;⁷¹ and, of course, it must be shown that the persons acting were in fact defendant's agents.⁷²

It may be presumed that a son, attending to trade in his father's establishment on Sunday, is acting as his father's agent for the purpose.⁷³ When defendant is shown to have been the manager of an entertainment project up to a short time before the giving of the Sunday performance alleged as an offense, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary it may be presumed that he was the manager of such entertainment at the time of the performance.⁷⁴ There is no presumption that the noise caused by the operation of a reaper on Sunday is a disturbance to others.⁷⁵ Where defendant is charged with Sunday opening, the state need not prove a sale, in order to establish existence of the offense.⁷⁶ It has been held that the state is not required to prove allegations made by it which constitute mere surplusage,⁷⁷ although it has been held that, if matters not required to be alleged are in fact alleged by the state, they must then be proved just as other matters in issue.⁷⁸

Any competent, relevant, and material evidence is admissible on the part of the prosecution to show the commission of the offense, and on the part of defendant to show his innocence of the charge.

The rules with respect to the admissibility of evidence in criminal cases generally apply to criminal prosecutions for violation of the Sunday laws;⁷⁹ any testimony tending to show acts of control and management is admissible on the issue of whether defendant was in charge of an establishment so as to be liable for keeping open on Sunday.⁸⁰ Testimony concerning defendant's purpose in keeping open,⁸¹ or his statements at the time of sale,⁸² is properly excluded when it has no tendency to bring his acts within the protection of the statute. Evidence regarding the circumstances and needs of the traveling public is not admissible on the question of necessity, where the offense charged is the performance of a specific act for a specific person not a member of the class to which the evidence relates.⁸³

Where the charge is for playing in a game on Sunday where an admission fee is charged, evidence of the payment of a fee to see the game by one or more persons is competent proof that a fee was charged, although other persons saw the game for nothing.⁸⁴ Evidence that the grand jury, which indicted defendant, failed to find bills against others for violating the Sunday laws,⁸⁵ or that the operation of other acts or enterprises of a similar character is allowed to continue on Sunday without molestation,⁸⁶ is properly excluded.

Evidence may be admitted in prosecutions for Sunday violation, although it has previously been employed on another prosecution for a different offense arising out of the same act.⁸⁷ Other persons present at the time of the alleged offense, and who witnessed it, are competent witnesses to prove the fact, whether or not they were connected with the same work, and may be called by the state for that purpose, although they were jointly engaged with defendant in the same transaction.⁸⁸

c. Weight and Sufficiency

The rules as to weight and sufficiency of evidence in criminal cases generally apply to criminal prosecutions for violation of Sunday laws.

The general rules as to the weight and sufficiency of evidence in criminal cases apply to criminal prosecutions for violation of Sunday laws.⁸⁹ In a prosecution for creating a nuisance by nonobscure of Sunday, it need not be shown that any person was actually disturbed, but it is sufficient that the acts complained of be shown to have been done in a public manner and open to observation by the public.⁹⁰

§ 22. — Trial and Review

Prosecutions for violation of Sunday laws are governed by the rules applicable to the trial of criminal cases generally; and in a jury trial questions of fact are for the jury.

The rules applicable to the trial of criminal cases generally have been applied in criminal prosecutions for violation of the Sunday laws with respect to the formation of the jury,⁹¹ the entry of a plea of not guilty where defendant stands mute,⁹² the order of proof,⁹³ and the judgment or verdict and conviction.⁹⁴ Statutes prescribing a particular method of trial of criminal offenses in the court in which the prosecution is commenced must be complied with.⁹⁵ Where the offense charged is that of keeping open store, the fact that several sales may have been made does not render applicable the doctrine of election.⁹⁶ A preliminary inquiry, by the state, addressed to one of the witnesses, as to whether he was present at a place on a particular Sunday, has been held insufficient to constitute an election confining the state to that Sunday.⁹⁷

Functions of court and jury. Save where constitutional provisions prescribe some other rule,⁹⁸ or where prosecutions for Sunday offenses are not triable by jury, the function of the court is to declare the law,⁹⁹ and that of the jury to determine the facts, under proper instructions from the court.¹ Ordinarily, such questions as defendant's intent,² the nature or character of the place kept open,³ whether a particular Sunday transaction constituted a sale,⁴ whether the acts done were work of defendant's ordinary calling,⁵ and whether an admission fee was charged are for the jury.⁶

It is also a question for the jury whether the act was, under the circumstances of the case, one of necessity or charity within the meaning of the statutory exception;⁷ but sometimes the evidence respecting the circumstances under which the act was committed may be such that a determination by the court of whether it was matter of necessity or charity is proper.⁸ The credibility of the witnesses is a matter for the jury.⁹ The general affirmative charge in behalf of the state should never be given where there is any evidence on which a verdict of acquittal could be based or where the facts in evidence pointing to quiet rest in inference only.¹⁰

Instructions. The court should instruct the jury as to the offense¹¹ and defendant is entitled to have a proper charge given respecting the burden of proof,¹² the respective functions of court and jury,¹³ the nonreligious character and purpose of the statute,¹⁴ the necessity of intent,¹⁵ and the meaning of necessity, within the statute.¹⁶ Not only should the charge state correctly the elements of the offense, but it is also essential that proper instruction be given with respect to matters of defense.¹⁷

An instruction which, in connection with the evidence, could have no tendency to mislead the jury is not bad because it is not stated as definitely as it might have been.¹⁸ Also it is not error to refuse to give a correct, but irrelevant charge,¹⁹ or instructions which, although technically accurate, are inadequate on a consideration of the whole case and which would tend to mislead the jury,²⁰ or instructions which are inaccurate,²¹ or instructions whose substance is comprised within instructions which are given.²²

The court should not submit to the jury all the phases of the statute, but should restrict them to the consideration of the one charged in the indictment;²³ and further, it is proper for the instructions to be limited to that charge of the indictment which there is evidence to sustain.²⁴ Although parts of the instructions, considered independent-

Instruction held proper

In trial for following defendant's usual vocation on Sunday by operating beer parlor, court's charge to jury that statute creating offense of exercising common vocations of life on Sunday, except for acts of real necessity or charity, does not apply to operation of restaurant and that defendant would be entitled to acquittal, if jury found that he was operating a restaurant, not a beer parlor, on Sunday, fairly presented issue whether defendant was operating bona fide restaurant or beer parlor on Sunday.—Baird v. State, 167 S.W.2d 332, 179 Tenn. 444.

Instruction held erroneous

In prosecution for gaming on Sunday, instruction that, if two or more persons play a game of shooting dice on Sunday, that constitutes gaming within meaning of statute whether they bet money on the game or not was error, and the error was prejudicial requiring reversal of conviction.—Jackson v. ly, are inconsistent, if, nevertheless, taken as a whole the instructions are consistent, no objection can be taken thereto.²⁵ Modification by the court of requested instructions so as to make them conform to the circumstances shown by the evidence is proper.²⁶

Appeal and error. The rules relative to appeal and error in criminal cases generally are applicable to criminal prosecutions for violation of Sunday laws.²⁷ Action of the trial court quashing an indictment for Sunday violation is to be sustained if there is any good or sufficient cause for it, although the reason for such action is not made to appear.²⁸ Similarly, where the bill of exceptions raises no matter of error with respect to the conviction, the appellate court will not search the record for error, violation of the Sunday laws being a mere misdemeanor.²⁹

§ 23. Actions and Proceedings under Penal Statutes

Where the statutes so provide, enforcement of Sunday laws may be by action for the recovery of a penalty for violation of their provisions.

The mode of enforcement established by some of the Sunday laws is by an action for the recovery of a penalty for violation of their provisions; and under some statutes repeated acts on the same Sunday constitute a single offense subjecting the violator to a single penalty,³⁰ but under others each act or transaction constitutes a separate offense.³¹ The provisions of the particular statute generally will determine who may be liable for the penalty or forfeiture,³² the amount of the penalty recoverable,³³ and the disposition of fines collected.³⁴

Proceedings to enforce liability. Under the statutory provisions, construed and applied in the same manner as other penal statutes, which govern proceedings to enforce liability, the courts have rendered various decisions regarding the availability of other remedies,³⁵ whether the proceedings are civil or criminal,³⁶ whether the offender is liable to criminal prosecution and the penalty,³⁷ the time for prosecution,³⁸ whether offenders may be proceeded against jointly or separately,³⁹ joinder and election of causes of action,⁴⁰ the form, requisites, and sufficiency of the complaint, declaration, or petition,⁴¹ the pleading of defenses,⁴² and variance.⁴³

Likewise decisions have been rendered on questions of evidence,⁴⁴ trial,⁴⁵ judgment,⁴⁶ review,⁴⁷ and costs.⁴⁸

III. CIVIL EFFECT OF SUNDAY REGULATIONS ON PRIVATE ACTS AND TRANSACTIONS

A. RIGHTS AND OBLIGATIONS ARISING FROM PRIVATE TRANSACTIONS

§ 24. What Law Governs

As a general rule the validity of a contract or transaction executed on Sunday will be determined by the law of the place where it was made.

As the enforcement of a contract executed on Sunday is not contrary to public policy or good morals, the general rule that a contract valid where made is valid everywhere obtains, and the contract will be enforced in a state other than the one in which it was made where it is not shown by proper proof that it violates the statutes of the state where made,⁴⁹ and all the more so where it appears that it is valid in such state.⁵⁰ When it is shown to violate the statutes of the state where made, it will not be enforced by the courts of other states.⁵¹ Further, the courts of one state will not enforce a contract, although made in another state, if its formation involved illegally doing acts on Sunday, essential to the existence of the contract, in the state where action is brought.⁵²

As the Sunday laws of a state have no extraterritorial force, the courts of one state will enforce a contract made within its borders, calling for or contemplating the performance of acts or transactions on Sunday not in that state permitted on that day, but which contemplates performance wholly in another state, where such performance is not shown to violate the law of such other state, as such contract is good at common law;⁵³ but, where a part of the performance was to have taken place in the state in which suit is brought, in which the acts to be done in that connection are illegal, the contract will not be enforced, regardless of the laws of other states in which the remainder of the performance was to have been done;⁵⁴ and a promissory note illegally given in return for an illegal sale and delivery of goods, the whole transaction being on Sunday, cannot be purged of the illegality and rendered enforceable by a stipulation for payment in another state.⁵⁵ The validity of the delivery on Sunday in another state of an assigned instrument is to be sustained where such transaction is not shown to be illegal in the state where delivery was made.⁵⁶

Ratification. The permissibility and sufficiency of a ratification to validate a Sunday transaction have been held to be matters to be governed by the law of that state whose laws govern the initial legality and validity of the transaction.⁵⁷

§ 25. Validity of Negotiations or Consummation on Sunday

The validity of negotiations for contracts or of contracts formed and consummated on Sunday are discussed infra §§ 26-29.

Examine Pocket Parts for later cases.

§ 26. — Negotiations for Contracts and Preliminary Transactions

Generally contracts or transactions consummated on a secular day are not invalidated by the fact that negotiations or matters preliminary to their consummation have taken place on a Sunday.

A contract whose formation is consummated on a subsequent weekday is not invalidated by reason of the fact that matters preliminary to its formation have taken place on a Sunday. Thus, written contracts arising on the signature and delivery of the writing are not void where the signature is on Sunday but the delivery not until a later weekday;⁵⁸ so a bond, made operative by signing and filing, is not void where the signing is on Sunday but the filing not until a subsequent weekday;⁵⁹ and a release, it has been held, is not a Sunday contract where, although it was signed on that day, the consideration was not paid until a subsequent secular day,⁶⁰ although there is authority to the contrary.⁶¹

Similarly, where acceptance is by letter, a letter written on Sunday but not posted or otherwise communicated until a later weekday is valid as an acceptance;⁶² and, if it is stipulated in the negotiations that a contract shall not arise until acceptance and approval of an instrument by the obligee, the fact that it is mailed on Sunday does not affect its validity if it is not accepted and approved until a later weekday.⁶³ Where the act on Sunday of an agent, purporting to be an acceptance, is ratified on another day by the principal, the circumstances being such that the contract is consummated by the ratification rather than by the prior purported acceptance, the contract is valid.⁶⁴

The mere carrying on of negotiations on Sunday will not invalidate a contract completed on a secular day, the final consummation of the contract on Sunday being necessary to bring it within the prohibition of the Sunday statutes.⁶⁵ However, there is some authority in support of the rule that it is not only agreements completed on Sunday which are void, but that, where certain acts involved in the making of a contract are unlawfully done on that day, whose valid performance is essential to the existence of any contract, the illegality and consequent nullity of those requisite steps toward the formation of a contract render the whole agreement unenforceable.⁶⁶ Tender of pilot's service made on Sunday as a basis for claim for compulsory payment of pilotage has been held valid under a state Sunday statute.⁶⁷

§ 27. — Formation and Consummation of Contracts

- a. In general

- c. Limitations of rule

a. In General

Contracts or transactions entered into or executed on Sunday are invalid and unenforceable only when they come within the terms of a statute prohibiting such acts on Sunday.

In the absence of statute contracts or undertakings entered into on Sunday are as valid as those made on any other day.⁶⁸ However, they are ren-

Explanation

Acts performed on weekday are subject to explanation by reference to conversation which took place on Sunday.—Lawrence v. Farwell, supra.

Contract to pay commissions

(1) Where contract to pay commissions did not arise until broker produced purchaser who was ready, able, and willing to purchase property, which event did not occur on Sunday, fact that broker and defendant discussed the matter of sale of property on Sunday did not render undertaking to pay commission to broker on production of purchaser illegal.—

Isenberg v. Williams, 27 N.E.2d 726, 306 Mass. 86—Maher v. Haycock, 18 N.E.2d 348, 301 Mass. 594.

(2) One entitled to be paid for a completed performance, as distinguished from work, labor, or services by the day, is not barred from recovery merely because he performed on Sunday one item in a long course of preliminaries placing him in a position finally to furnish the completed performance on a secular day.—Maher v. Haycock, supra.

Settlement of liability

Where original understanding in respect to settlement of liability of officer of association was made on Sunday, the offer of securities in settlement of his liability and their acceptance by association on subsequent secular day constituted valid contract.—Michigan Bankers' Ass'n v. dered unenforceable in many jurisdictions by reason of statutory provisions.⁶⁹ Thus, where the statutes explicitly declare that all or certain contracts or undertakings entered into on Sunday shall be void, any transaction falling within the terms of the statute is without effect.⁷⁰

Moreover, even though the statutes do not expressly declare Sunday contracts or undertakings to be void, if the parties, in entering into such contracts or undertakings generally, or in entering into the particular contract or agreement involved, on Sunday, perform acts which fall within the prohibitions of penal or criminal statutes regulating the observance of the day, such contracts or undertakings are void for the same reasons and to the same extent as other contracts generally whose making is tainted with illegality.⁷¹ Thus, the act of contracting being illegal, the resultant engagements or undertakings are invalid, where the Sunday statutes prohibit public traffic,⁷² or engaging in worldly employment or business,⁷³ or in any other case where they in terms mention business generally as the thing, or one of the things, prohibited,⁷⁴ or, according to some authorities, where they prohibit labor or laboring.⁷⁵

Where the prohibition is more limited but the formation of the contract or undertaking falls in fact, within the offense as limited, the engagement is similarly incapable of enforcement, as where both prohibition and transaction concern work, labor, or business of one's ordinary calling,⁷⁶ or where the prohibition deals with, and the transaction consists of, acts causing or constituting a disturbance.⁷⁷ A Sunday contract for, or the consideration for which is, the sale of property on that day, is invalid under provisions prohibiting the purchase and sale, or the disposition, of property;⁷⁸ and it has been held, under a statute prohibiting keeping open a store or selling or disposing of wares or merchandise, that the seller is in pari delicto with the buyer, and the whole sale illegal and incapable of serving as a basis for the enforcement of liability.⁷⁹

However, the doctrine that contracts made on Sunday are void depends alone on statutory enactments,⁸⁰ and, except as such enactments extend to impair their validity, contracts made on Sunday are no less valid and enforceable than those made on other days.⁸¹ Thus a contract executed on Sunday is on the same footing as one made on any other day where the prohibitions expressed in the statute are so restricted or qualified as not to render its making illegal,⁸² as where the prohibition is, but the contract is not, with reference to work or business of one's usual or ordinary calling or vocation,⁸³ or where the prohibition is only of acts done so as to disturb the peace and good order of society and the contract is made privately without creating any disturbance,⁸⁴ or where the prohibition is of servile⁸⁵ or common⁸⁶ labor, or,

according to the rule in some jurisdictions, of work⁸⁷ or labor.⁸⁸

So, also, where the Sunday laws confine the operation of their prohibitions to a specified part of the day, contracts made on Sunday at some other time are not void;⁸⁹ and prohibitions expressed with respect to designated business do not render void contracts not made in the course of any included business.⁹⁰

Private casual sales agreements are not void under statutes forbidding public selling, or exposing or offering for sale.⁹¹ Similarly, where a contract or undertaking falls within exceptions specified in a statute, its validity is not impaired by its having been made on Sunday, as where it comes within exceptions in favor of matters of necessity⁹² or charity,⁹³ or of persons observing a day other than Sunday as the Sabbath.⁹⁴

Negotiations or incidental transactions on weekdays. Although negotiations or preliminary transactions have taken place on prior weekdays, if the actual formation or consummation of the contract is on a Sunday, it is in no better position than if the whole of the transaction were on Sunday.⁹⁵ Similarly, if the contract involved is in fact fully consummated on a Sunday, but its nature is such that it has no vitality or operative effect until certain other acts, performed on a weekday, are done, the latter circumstance is insufficient to operate as a postponement of the completion of the contract and thus to render the agreement enforceable.⁹⁶

b. Contracts in Writing

To the extent that the statute prohibits it, a contract in writing executed on Sunday is invalid, even though dated as though made on a secular day.

Where a written instrument embodies and comprises the agreement or undertaking, it is not effective as a contract or engagement, where it has been completely executed on a Sunday, if, under the statutes, contracts generally or the particular kind of contract involved cannot be validly made on Sunday;⁹⁷ and this is true, even though the writing is dated as though made on a secular day;⁹⁸ but a writing dated Monday has been held valid where it contains nothing to show that it was executed or effective prior to such date.⁹⁹

Where otherwise void by operation of the statute, a writing is not rendered valid by reason of the fact that the transaction serving as its basis, or in satisfaction or settlement of which it is made, occurred and was completed on a prior secular day;¹ nevertheless, the rights arising out of such prior transaction are not impaired by the acts done on Sunday but remain as though such acts had not taken place.² However, the validity and effect of such instruments are not impaired by reason of their execution on Sunday if contracts and undertakings generally, of like tenor and made under like cir-

c. Limitations of Rule

The invalidity of Sunday contracts or undertakings may be limited to cases where the contract or undertaking is executory, and may depend on whether the parties are in pari delicto or on whether the act done was actually done on a Sunday.

According to some authority, the invalidity of Sunday contracts or undertakings is limited to those which are executory, and it is held that, while such contracts are void,⁴ a contract neither void at common law, nor expressly avoided by any statute, and which has been fully executed, binds the parties in so far as the execution affects their actual position, although it was made on Sunday;⁵ and thus a contract made and performed on the same Sunday, although illegal and incapable as serving as the basis of any further rights, will nevertheless not be disregarded at the instance of either party thereto, since, both being in pari delicto, neither will be relieved by the court from the position in which he finds himself.⁶ On the other hand, it has been held, in a few jurisdictions, that the question whether the contract is executory or executed is immaterial.⁷

Where a Sunday contract is wholly or partly executed on one side only, the promise of the other party remaining wholly executory, the latter's power to retain the whole benefit of his illegal conduct and to cast the whole detriment, without any recourse, contractual or otherwise, on the person who has performed depends on the nature of the performance whereof he has had the benefit;⁸ Thus, where money or property has been transferred on Sunday as the subject matter of such a contract, there is no enforceable right, whether on a contract express or implied or in any other manner, to secure a return of what has been so delivered or of its value;⁹ on the other hand, where, pursuant to such a Sunday contract, labor or services are performed on subsequent weekdays,¹⁰ or property has been taken over and employed by the lessee under an invalid Sunday lease,¹¹ there is authority to the effect that recovery can be had for the reasonable value of the benefits actually received, not by any reference to the invalid agreement, but through the implication of a different agreement to pay the reasonable worth of what has been received.

Executed authority to act as special agent. It has been held that authorizing or directing another, on Sunday, to perform the physical act of delivering to the obligee a writing otherwise fully executed is sufficient to permit of the enforceability of the instrument after actual delivery on another day;¹² but there is other authority to the contrary,¹³ at least in the absence of ratification of the authority on a weekday.¹⁴ However, the possession by one joint obligor being the possession of both, a delivery by such a party, on a weekday, of a Sunday instrument is not subject to attack on the ground of a lack of authority to deliver.¹⁵ If the authority attempted to be thus conferred is not so limited, but is an authority to negotiate and contract as agent in behalf of another, it is illegal and invalid in the same manner as any other Sunday transaction, and the principal is not bound by the acts of an agent thus authorized.¹⁶

Parties must be in pari delicto. In view of the basis of the unenforceability of illegal contracts in the principle, Ex dolo malo non oritur actio, a party to a Sunday contract who is not in pari delicto with the other party may, as in the case of other legal contracts generally, enforce the agreement or rights dependent thereon, even though its making on Sunday involves the doing of such acts and matters as to render it unenforceable at the behest of the other party;¹⁷ and before the contract will be declared void, it must appear that the party seeking to enforce it had some voluntary agency in consummating it on that day.¹⁸ This limitation does not prevail, however, where the statute in terms provides that Sunday contracts shall be void.¹⁹

Reality of Sunday formation. Of course, where the validity of a contract or undertaking is attacked on the ground that it has been entered into on Sunday, its formation must actually have occurred on that day;²⁰ and, if the contract has been really consummated on a weekday, it is not open to objection as a Sunday contract.²¹

28. Mass.—Donovan v. McCarty, 30 N.E. 221, 155 Mass. 543.

On principles analogous to those announced with respect to contracts, the validity of various other private acts and transactions on Sunday, not coming within the scope of statutory restrictions or prohibitions affecting the day or otherwise unlawful, has been sustained. Thus it is held that gifts, executed and completed on Sunday, are in general valid and operative;²² wills do not come within the meaning and intent of the Sunday statutes and have been held to be valid, although executed on the Sabbath;²³ and representations made on a Sunday are capable of serving as the basis of an estoppel.²⁴

Likewise, on principles analogous to those on which the validity of Sunday contracts is determined, and in accordance with the results reached in cases of that character, the courts in the various jurisdictions have sustained or denied the validity of deeds²⁵ or assignments,²⁶ including trust deeds²⁷ or assignments in trust,²⁸ and of taxpayers' petitions,²⁹ acknowledgements,³⁰ and Sunday rescission of preëxisting contracts.³¹

As affecting statute of limitations

(1) In some jurisdictions an acknowledgment made on Sunday will remove the bar of the statute of limitations.—Ayres v. Bane, 39 Iowa 518—37 C.J. p 1099 notes 67-69.

(2) In other jurisdictions it has been held to be of no avail.—Bumgardner v. Taylor, 28 Ala. 687.

 N.Y.—Pomeranz v. More, 63 N.Y.S. 2d 111, 187 Misc. 383.
 60 C.J. p 1110 note 26.

The action of corporate directors at a meeting on Sunday, the validity of which was contested by general manager, in terminating the employment of general manager and of secretary, was void and the manager was not estopped to question the validity of the rescission of his employment at a meeting held on Sunday because occasional other meetings had been held on Sunday.—Smith v. Mills, 24 So.2d 864, 199 Miss. 367.

Reinstatement on Sunday of a member in a benefit society has been held valid and binding;³² as has the recall of a proposed policy on Sunday;³³ and an insurance policy issued on a secular day and becoming effective on Sunday is not illegal;³⁴ but an attempt on Sunday to change the beneficiary of a policy has been held invalid as an attempt to transact business.³⁵

Delivery of an assigned chose in action on Sunday is a valid delivery to effectuate the assignment where there is no statute adversely affecting it,³⁶ as is delivery of a release.³⁷ Similarly, delivery on a Sunday of a deed prepared and executed, save for delivery, on another day has been held valid;³⁸ an executed delivery of possession on Sunday operates to confer on the transferee a possession sufficient to sustain a possessory lien;³⁹ and a delivery of personalty pursuant and as an incident to a preëxisting contract of bailment is a sufficient delivery to require of the bailee the care ordinarily incident to that relation.⁴⁰ A delivery on Sunday, if the doing of the acts involved is illegal, has been held an insufficient delivery to take a contract out of the statute of frauds.⁴¹ A delivery of money in escrow by one proposing to purchase property being but a step in the negotiations and not a final transaction in itself, the proposed purchaser, in the event no contract is consummated, may recover back the money, although the delivery was on a Sunday.⁴²

Incomplete transaction. Where a portion of a transaction takes place on Sunday, but it is not completed on that day so as to become effective, it is not vitiated by the illegal, and perhaps punishable, acts of those concerned in it.⁴³ Conversely, a transaction actually consummated on Sunday may be illegal and invalid, even though a part of the transaction took place at some other time.⁴⁴

Performance of obligation by payment or otherwise. Although performance on Sunday of a valid contract will not be treated as a nullity, even though it involves the doing of acts prohibited by statute,⁴⁵ such performance will not be given an independently affirmative effect beyond mere performance;⁴⁶ but, where the acts in performance of the contract are not within the scope of the Sunday laws, such a performance on that day is as permissible and legal as performance on any other day.⁴⁷ There is no right to demand the performance on Sunday of a contract when such performance involves the doing of acts prohibited by Sunday regulations, and no rights can be founded on such a demand;⁴⁸ but, when the performance involves only acts which may lawfully be done on that day, under the prevailing statutes, the right to such performance is the same as on any other day, and a failure or refusal to perform is attended with the same consequences.⁴⁹ The payment on Sunday of a preëxisting debt discharges it, if the creditor retains the money paid.⁵⁰ Payment or performance incident to a valid existing contract, voluntarily given and accepted on that day, does not impair the rights of the parties under their preëxisting agreement;⁵¹ and a Sunday sales contract, otherwise valid, is not rendered void by payment on Sunday of the price of the goods sold.⁵²

Giving of notice. There is considerable authority to the effect that a notice given on Sunday is void and does not change or affect the rights of the parties,⁵⁴ even though the notice is received without objection;⁵⁵ however, there is other authority recognizing the validity of notice given on that day,⁵⁶ at least where the party to whom such notice is given accepts and acts on it,⁵⁷ or where such person so conducts himself as to induce the person giving notice to refrain from acting on a subsequent day, whereby the latter might have saved himself from loss.⁵⁸

Acts of benevolent or religious societies. The proceedings and transactions of benevolent⁵⁹ or religious⁶⁰ societies as such performed on Sunday are valid. The rule has no application to societies not of a religious or charitable nature.⁶¹

§ 29. — Competency as Evidence of Sunday Admissions, Entries, or Statements

Generally, an admission or statement made, or a conversation had, on Sunday is admissible evidence.

As the mere telling of the truth on the Sabbath is not forbidden, an admission or statement made on Sunday is competent evidence, as it relates to a previously incurred liability,⁶² or as part of the res gestæ for the purpose of explaining the relations and conduct of the parties;⁶³ and a conversation had on a Sunday is competent for the purpose of explaining later conversations or conduct showing their meaning,⁶⁴ or of showing that a party to a subsequent transaction on a weekday was vested with notice or knowledge of outstanding rights and interests.⁶⁵ However, a book account dated on Sunday is ordinarily not competent,⁶⁶ at least where it is not shown that the transactions recorded in fact took place on another day;⁶⁷ but, where the entries relate to matters of necessity, a different result has been reached.⁶⁸

§ 30. Rescission of Sunday Contracts

While it has been held that an illegal Sunday contract may be rescinded, generally no aid or relief will be granted either party to such a contract.

There is some authority to the effect that a contract illegally made on Sunday may be rescinded under the rules applicable to the rescission of contracts generally;⁶⁹ elsewhere it is held that, although there can be no rescission as there is no agreement whatever to be rescinded, nevertheless a party to a Sunday transaction can subsequently claim and obtain a restoration to the position in fact occupied by him prior to the attempted transaction.⁷⁰ However, by the weight of authority, as

Amounts recoverable

With respect to assignee's estoppel to rescind Sunday assignment of mortgage and recover amount paid, the parties are in pari delicto, the court will refuse its aid to either, and, at least where the contract or conveyance is executed, neither party may withdraw from the agreement so as to restore himself to his preëxisting position nor rescind and recover back property or money which has been passed to the other.⁷¹ Nevertheless, if the party seeking to abrogate such transaction was at the time of the making of the contract under a disability such that he was incapable of contracting, the right to avoid the transaction springing from that disability and to recover back the property affected is not destroyed by reason of the time when the acts were done.⁷²

§ 31. Ratification or Renewal of Sunday Acts or Contracts

Authorities are divided on whether illegal Sunday contracts or transactions may be ratified or renewed. Where they may be ratified, this may be done in the same manner as other contracts or transactions are ratified.

There is some authority holding that illegal Sunday contracts are void to such an extent that they are incapable of subsequent ratification by the parties.⁷³ According to other authority, however, they are not viewed as being tainted with any general illegality, but, being illegal only as to the time in which they are entered into, they are capable of being made valid by affirmation and ratification on a subsequent day.⁷⁴ However, even though a Sunday contract is considered incapable of ratification, it is generally held that there is nothing to prevent the parties from making, on a subsequent date, another contract, having, in part or in whole, the same terms and substance,⁷⁵ and that the consideration emanating from the tainted contract is sufficient to form the foundation for a new express promise on which recovery may be had.⁷⁶

According to some authorities, while acts done on a subsequent weekday which are merely incidental to the Sunday transaction will not save the undertaking from the condemnation of the statute,⁷⁷ and all the elements essential to the formation of a contract must concur before a subsequent new contract with respect to the Sunday transaction will be recognized and enforced,⁷⁸ no particular formality is necessary for the purpose of forming such a new contract;⁷⁹ and, if the conduct of the parties is such that a contract or undertaking can in fact be implied therefrom under the ordinary rules with respect to the implication of contracts, it is sufficient to make out a new and valid engagement despite the prior invalid Sunday transaction;⁸⁰ but according to other authority nothing short of a subsequent express promise is sufficient for that purpose.⁸¹

Moreover, where the statute specifically declares that Sunday contracts shall be void, it has been held that they are a nullity to such an extent that they are incapable of affording a valid consideration for a subsequent express promise to pay or perform the obligations attempted to be created by them, such promise being unenforceable;⁸² and assignee acquired no title by purchasing property on foreclosure requested by assignor, but held record title for latter and was properly allowed expense of foreclosure requested by assignor and payments for taxes and insurance.—Bradt v. Amsden, 238 N.W. 184, 255 Mich. 310.

Parol ratification

A written contract for purchase of corporate stock, which was invalid because executed on Sunday, could not thereafter be ratified or adopted by parol and still retain its character as a written agreement, particularly where terms were materially modified.—Ryan v. Gilbert, 71 N.E.2d 219, 320 Mass. 682, 170 A.L.R. 241.

in a few jurisdictions a like result has been reached even where the statute merely made the contract illegal and not expressly void.⁸³

Sufficiency of ratification. In those jurisdictions where a ratification of a Sunday contract is sustained, a contract is held to be ratified by complying with its terms;⁸⁴ by directing the other party to the agreement to proceed under it;⁸⁵ by making and accepting a delivery of the property⁸⁶ or money involved;⁸⁷ by retaining and using property delivered on Sunday;⁸⁸ by partial payments,⁸⁹ at least where the property sold is retained;⁹⁰ by an express promise to pay or perform,⁹¹ especially when coupled with a retention of property sold;⁹² by a transfer of the property received under a Sunday contract;⁹³ by the giving or delivery of a note⁹⁴ or a receipt,⁹⁵ or by procuring the signature of another as surety to a Sunday note;⁹⁶ by a refusal to restore goods or money delivered under the agreement on subsequent demand;⁹⁷ by bringing suit on the Sunday transaction;⁹⁸ by the collection of a check;⁹⁹ and by demanding payment.¹

According to some authority, it has even been held that failure to repudiate or delay in repu-

diating a Sunday contract may alone be sufficient to constitute a ratification;² but in order that it may have such effect, the delay must be for an unreasonable period of time and a shorter delay is insufficient for the purpose.³ The contract is not ratified by a simple request to forbear suit,⁴ by retaining a payment⁵ even after a demand for its return,⁶ or by a declaration of an intention to pay, which is supported by no consideration,⁷ or which is made to third persons, strangers to the agreement.⁸ Any act of one party, not known or assented to by the other, is insufficient as a ratification;⁹ a ratification requires some conduct, manifesting recognition of the agreement, on the part of the party against whom ratification is urged or an agent duly authorized to express the principal's assent.¹⁰

Applications to transactions other than contracts. On the same principles and to the same extent as the above rules with respect to ratification have been applied to contracts entered into on Sunday, the existence of the power and the sufficiency of its exercise have been determined in cases involving the enforceability of other transactions consummated on that day, such as the execution of a deed,¹¹

Knowledge

The fact that vendor did not know assignment of purchaser's interest was made on Sunday at time vendor made statement that contract was no longer in effect because of default in payment and when vendor filed pleading, which did not assert invalidity, precluded conclusions that vendor had affirmed the assignment by such acts.—Nygren v. § 32. Contracts Contemplating or Requiring Sunday Performance

Whether a contract calling for or contemplating the performance on Sunday of acts not in themselves illegal is invalid depends on the terms of the particular Sunday law and of the contract itself.

All acts save judicial transactions being legally performable on Sunday at common law, a contract calling for or contemplating performance on Sunday of any acts not in themselves unlawful and not within the scope of the Sunday regulations, if any, is valid;¹⁵ but a contract, made at any time, requiring or contemplating the performance on Sunday of acts coming within the prohibitions and outside the exceptions of applicable Sunday enactments, is a contract with an unlawful object and hence void.¹⁶

Where the contract calls for Sunday acts which may or may not be illegal, depending on the manner of performance, it will not be assumed that any violation of law was intended, and the contract will not be held invalid solely by reason of the terms relative to Sunday performance;¹⁷ and, similarly, it has been held that, where the legality of performance depends on the place of performance, the contract will not be held illegal where it does not clearly require that the acts on Sunday be done in a place where they would be illegal.¹⁸

Even though the acts to be performed come within the prohibitions of the statute, the contract, in order to be void, must imperatively require the acts to be performed on Sunday;¹⁹ and it must call for a complete, rather than a merely partial, performance on that day;²⁰ but a contract calling for performance of continuing services, part of which is required to be done on Sundays as on other days, has been held to be illegal and void as a whole if the nature of the contract is such that it is entire and not divisible.²¹ If, notwithstanding the unenforceability of contracts calling for Sunday performance, a party, in pursuance of such agreement, enters into a particular relationship with the other party on Sunday, the liabilities arising from such relationship may be capable of enforcement;²² so, too, payments made in consideration of actual illegal performance pursuant to such a contract cannot be recovered back, but the parties, being in pari delicto, will be left where they have placed themselves.²³

Where the contract does not require performance on Sunday, but simply names Sunday as a means of estimating the compensation, it is valid.²⁴ Furthermore, a contract fixing a date falling on Sunday as the time for performance is not bad if it is such as the law construes as calling for performance on the preceding or following day,²⁵ and generally, in such case, the contract is performable on the next business day.²⁶ Contracting for interest to commence running on a Sunday does not render an agreement illegal.²⁷ The Sunday law has been held no excuse for not keeping a watchman in an insured building according to the terms of the policy.²⁸

Ratification. According to some authority a contract, invalid because it requires or contemplates unlawful performance on Sunday, is incapable of ratification,²⁹ even after a change has been made in the statute so as to permit the acts contracted for to be done on the Sabbath,³⁰ although a totally new contract referring to the same subject matter may then be made.³¹ There is other authority, however, holding that a subsequent express promise to pay for services performed on that day is sufficiently supported by consideration to admit of the enforcement of such promise as a new contract.³²

§ 33. Rights of Third Persons

The illegality of Sunday transactions will not affect third persons whose rights were acquired in good faith and without knowledge or notice of the illegality.

An indorsee or holder in due course of a negotiable instrument,³³ or an assignee of a contract or undertaking,³⁴ made on Sunday, taking without notice of that fact or of circumstances to put him on inquiry has been held unaffected by its illegality and entitled to enforce it according to its terms, at least where the obligor has acted to mislead him as to its character as by misdating;³⁵ and, under like circumstances, a bona fide purchaser of property transferred to a prior party in the chain of title under a conveyance executed on Sunday takes a title unaffected by the illegality of that transaction.³⁶ However, the defense of illegality is available against an assignee or indorsee not a holder in good faith or a bona fide purchaser to the same extent as against the original promisee.³⁷

Similar rules apply where the illegal transaction consists of a Sunday indorsement instead of original execution on Sunday.³⁸ Even a subsequent taker with full knowledge of the circumstances has as good a position as the party to the illegal transaction under whom he holds.³⁹

Third persons cannot disregard a delivery or transfer executed pursuant to a Sunday transaction or have it set aside merely because the transaction was illegal under the Sunday acts;⁴⁰ nor can they object to the sufficiency of instruments executed and delivered on that day⁴¹ or escape liability, for injuries to property so delivered, arising on grounds having no relation to the contract.⁴² An indorsement of a negotiable instrument on Sunday is so far available to the promisee therein, however, that he can take advantage of its illegality to limit the indorsee's rights to such as belong to a mere holder without indorsement.⁴³ Where, although the contract was void, plaintiff continued to perform until the other party was unable to perform, and the rights of a third party have intervened, plaintiff may not recover money paid under the contract.⁴⁴

Contracts contemplating Sunday performance. Moreover, to the same extent as is the fact of the consummation of contracts on Sunday, the circumstance that they contemplate or require performance on the Sabbath of acts forbidden by the Sunday laws is unavailable to aid or relieve third persons who are strangers to the agreement.⁴⁵

§ 35. — Right of Action and Defenses

- a. Right of action
- b. Defenses

a. Right of Action

A right of action on a Sunday contract or transaction depends on whether the contract or transaction is valid, the courts generally refusing to grant enforcement of, or relief from, contracts or transactions violative of the Sunday laws.

If neither the acts and transactions done on Sunday nor the Sunday performance constituting the subject of the contract is such as to render the transaction illegal at its inception, or if the Sunday conduct involved in its formation has been sufficiently renewed or ratified on another day to establish an obligation between the parties, the contract or transaction is not tainted with illegality and is enforceable in the same manner and to the same extent as a contract or transaction on any other day.⁴⁶ However, a result to the contrary is reached where contracts or transactions, illegal at their inception and not established by any subsequent action of the parties, are concerned, at least where the situation is not complicated by questions of total execution of the contract or transaction or of the rights of third persons, and it has frequently been declared by the courts that no action can be maintained in a court of law or equity for the enforcement of, or relief from, such contracts and transactions,⁴⁷ although there are some instances in which courts of equity have taken cognizance of them as a basis of rights.⁴⁸ The courts will neither enforce nor give damages for breach of such void contracts.⁴⁹

It has been said that whether a claim not directly on, but connected with, an illegal Sunday transaction can be maintained in a court of law depends on whether plaintiff must bring in the illegal transaction to aid him in making out his case;⁵⁰ but it is not really material that plaintiff should be the one who discloses the transaction and, if the illegality lies directly in the course of events which give rise to the suit, and is inseparably connected with the cause of action, whichever of the parties may or must disclose it to support his position is of no consequence;⁵¹ if, in any case, plaintiff must rely on the unlawful agreement or transaction to support his case, he must fail,⁵² but if he can show a complete cause of action without reliance on the illegal transaction, although that may incidentally appear and even may be important as explanatory of other facts in the case, the illegality does not impair his right of recovery.⁵³

By virtue of these rules, one cannot ordinarily, disregarding the special contract made on Sunday, or in contemplation of Sunday performance, sue and recover on an implied promise with respect to the same subject matter,⁵⁴ although there are some apparent exceptions to the rule;⁵⁵ an action is not maintainable on a warranty made during the course of an illegal sale or exchange of property on Sunday,⁵⁶ although there is authority to the contrary;⁵⁷ neither is an action maintainable

Bailment. With respect to an action for conversion, or for damages, based on injury to property illegally hired or otherwise bailed to another on Sunday, or for illegal use on Sunday, by using the property beyond the time fixed for the bailment⁵⁹ or by otherwise exceeding the terms of bailment,⁶⁰ there is authority holding that the action may be maintained, as it rests in tort, independent of the contract of hiring or bailment. However, it has been held that such an action, based on violation by the bailee of his duty of care while acting within the scope of the bailment, is not sustainable;⁶¹ but there is other authority to the contrary.⁶²

Injury of the bailee from defects in the property bailed affords a right of recovery where a statute exists conferring such a right⁶³ or where the property is bailed for a lawful purpose, as, for instance, one coming within statutory exceptions in favor of matters of necessity or charity;⁶⁴ and there is authority holding that, where property is hired together with the services of a servant of the bailor to operate such property, the bailee may recover for injuries sustained by the negligence of such servant, although the hiring on Sunday and the Sunday operation whereby injury resulted were both illegal.⁶⁵

Actual illegality may be set up as a defense in a proper case; and generally the defendant must, especially under statutes so providing, restore the consideration in order to use the defense of illegality.

Where a particular contract or transaction sued on is actually illegal, because of the time of making

or of contemplated performance being on Sunday, that illegality, at least in cases arising between the parties thereto and where the contract is executory may, in the absence of a sufficient renewal, ratification, or estoppel, be set up as a defense.⁶⁶ Further, the fact that the contract has been so far executed that defendant has received and holds money or property delivered under the agreement does not destroy the availability of the defense, since the defense of illegality prevails, not as a protection to defendant, but as a disability in plaintiff.⁶⁷

Where Sunday is not in fact the time of making or of contemplated performance,⁶⁸ or where, being so, the contract is nevertheless not illegal,⁶⁹ or where there is a valid subsequent renewal, ratification, or estoppel establishing a binding obligation,⁷⁰ the fact that the contract or transaction was made or contemplates performance on Sunday affords no defense against enforcement; and an illegal Sunday contract cannot be set up as a defense to an otherwise well grounded cause of action existing independently of the Sunday transaction.⁷¹

Restoration of consideration or benefit. Under the statutes of some jurisdictions, a person who receives a valuable consideration for a contract made on Sunday is not permitted to defend an action on the contract on the ground that it was so made until he restores the consideration;⁷² and, in a few jurisdictions, a like rule has been reached without reference to any statute specifically so providing.⁷³ Where such a rule exists defendant must in fact make restoration in order to use the defense of invalidity, the operation of the rule not being defeated by the fact that the consideration is of such nature that it cannot be restored,⁷⁴ or that defendant cannot safely and profitably make restoration.⁷⁵ Such a statute applies only where the action is based on a contract made on Sunday and consideration has been received by defendant in respect of it.⁷⁶

The statutory provisions do not apply to implied contracts to pay for services illegally performed on Sunday, no restoration of the value received being necessary in such case;⁷⁷ and this is true as to actions against a bailee under a Sunday bailment for failure to exercise proper care.⁷⁸

§ 36. — Pleadings

- a. In general
- b. Issues, proof, and variance

a. In General

The rules of pleading in civil actions apply in actions on contracts or transactions made on Sunday. The manner of pleading the defense of illegality under Sunday laws is determined by the statutes and decisions of the particular state.

Subject to the rules of pleading in civil actions generally, under the statutes and decisions of some jurisdictions, the defense of illegality under the Sunday laws must be specifically pleaded or notice of it given,⁷⁹ and it cannot be proved under a general denial,⁸⁰ or a plea of non est factum;⁸¹ but under other statutes it is held that the defense need not be specially pleaded,⁸² but may be raised under a plea of the general issue and without any specification of defense with respect to it.⁸³ In a partition suit the issue of the validity of a deed executed on Sunday may be made by answer, a cross bill not being necessary.⁸⁴

Particularity. Where a special pleading of illegality is required, it has been held that the facts showing a violation of the Sunday law must be stated as fully as is required in framing an indictment for such a violation.⁸⁵ The allegations of the pleading cannot be extended by inference, however probable.⁸⁶ Thus, where the notice or knowledge of one party is essential to the illegality of his contract, and its consequent unenforceability, that fact must be pleaded by the party seeking to defeat recovery;⁸⁷ and an averment that an instrument whose legal effect arises on delivery was signed on Sunday is not sufficient, where there is no allegation of the time of delivery.⁸⁸ It has, however, been held sufficient to allege the date of the making of an instrument in defense, without stating that the day was Sunday.⁸⁹

The pleading should consist of a statement of the facts rather than of the legal conclusions to be drawn from them;⁹⁰ and hence it has been held that an allegation that an instrument was "executed" on Sunday without stating what acts were done is too indefinite;⁹¹ and so is an averment that an

Action by assignee of purchaser

Where assignment of purchaser's interest in bond for deed was executed on Sunday, vendor could defend against assignee's action for specific performance on ground that assignment was made on Sunday, without paying to assignee amounts which vendor had received from purchaser, and the assignee, in equity, had no right to demand that vendor, as condition of claiming that assignment was void, should pay to assignee amounts which vendor had received from purchaser.—Nygren v. Potocek, supra.

instrument sued on "is illegal,"⁹² but an allegation that the instrument was "executed" on Sunday has been held sufficient,⁹³ and an allegation that a contract was made and signed on Sunday has also been held sufficient, being equivalent to an allegation that it was executed.⁹⁴

Pleading facts within exceptions to Sunday laws.

In an action for breach of a contract falling within the prohibitions of the Sunday laws, it has been held that plaintiff must, by his pleadings, bring the transaction within the statutory exceptions, in order to state a cause of action;⁹⁵ but a different rule prevails where by statute it is provided that the illegality shall be no defense, in actions for damages, to anyone voluntarily acting on that day, the burden being on defendant in such case to allege that there was no voluntary illegal conduct on his part.⁹⁶

A person asserting the invalidity of a particular transaction need not allege that the contract or transaction involved was not within the exceptions.⁹⁷ If plaintiff, in his pleading, undertakes to set up and avoid the defense of illegality under the Sunday laws, the matter pleaded in avoidance must sufficiently refute the illegality or he will not have stated a cause of action.⁹⁸

tract was made on Sunday but alleging payment on Monday, without intimation that the contract was made at any other time, has been held an admission of the defense of illegal Sunday execution.⁹⁹ In some jurisdictions by statute a renewal or ratification, or an estoppel, is not pleadable by way of reply or replication;¹ but, where such pleading is available and the facts pleaded are sufficient to make out an enforceable ratification or renewal, the reply is good.² An allegation of ratification is not inconsistent with a denial of invalidity of the contract, so as to prevent reliance on both.³

Demurrer. According to some authority, the validity of a contract, which appears to have been executed on Sunday, cannot be attacked by demurrer, but only by plea or answer;⁴ but there is other authority holding that a pleading showing on its face that the pleader relies on an unenforceable contract or transaction made or to be performed on Sunday is subject to attack by demurrer.⁵ Conversely, a defense based on the doing of acts on Sunday is subject to demurrer where the acts alleged are not, under the circumstances, sufficient to invalidate the transaction,⁶ although a result to the contrary has been reached where the acts alleged are sufficient for that purpose;⁷ further, the defense of illegality has been held subject to demurrer where the pleading does not show restoration of the consideration, under statutes making restoration a condition to the employment of such defense.⁸

Answer held sufficient

Answer which alleged that contract sued on was made and signed by defendants on Sunday was sufficient as against objection that answer did not allege that contract was either delivered to, or accepted by, plaintiff on Sunday, since allegation that contract was made was equivalent to allegation that contract was executed, and word "executed" included delivery, and the answer stated a defense, notwithstanding that it did not deny that contract was accepted by plaintiff on Jan. 12, which was not Sunday, since answer was sufficient to allege contract was executed on Sunday and not on day named in complaint.—W. Telegrams

In action for damages resulting from delay in transmission of telegram which related to purchase of beans by plaintiff's agent and which it was alleged should have been delivered on Sunday morning, petition was not demurrable on ground that telegraph company was not required to deliver telegram on Sunday, where it appears on the face of the message that transmission of such telegram was a work of necessity within exception to general prohibition of Sunday work, but the rule is otherwise if it does not so appear.—Postal Telegraph-Cable Co. v. 8. Conn.—Wetherell v. Hollister, 48 A. 826, 73 Conn. 622.

A pleading relying on a contract which requires work to be performed on Sunday has been held not subject to demurrer where it does not appear but that the work required to be done comes within exceptions to the Sunday regulations.⁹ It has been held, in at least one jurisdiction, that, where some items of an account are for illegal Sunday work and others for work on weekdays, demurrer to the Sunday items must be special and not general.¹⁰ The rule that a demurrer searches the record and attacks the first error in pleading has been held applicable in such actions, so as to render plaintiff's demurrer to the plea operative against his complaint stating a cause of action based on a contract illegal under the Sunday laws.¹¹ Demurrer to several paragraphs of a pleading jointly, being subject to be defeated if any of the paragraphs demurred to is sufficient, is properly overruled where one paragraph of a reply demurred to properly sets forth a valid ratification or renewal on a secular day.¹²

Amendment. Amendment of a defense, after the evidence is in, to include a plea of Sunday execution has been held properly refused, under a statute providing that the court may allow amendments in the furtherance of justice, especially where such amendment would allege facts in direct contradiction of defendant's testimony.¹³

b. Issues, Proof, and Variance

There is a conflict of authority as to whether the fact that a contract is void by operation of the Sunday laws can be taken into consideration where the issue is not raised by the pleadings.

According to some authority, where the issue is not raised by the pleadings, the fact that a contract is of such a nature as to be void by operation of the Sunday laws cannot be taken into consideration;¹⁴ hence, where there is no sufficient allegation in the pleadings that a contract or transaction dated on another day is such as to be rendered illegal by operation of the Sunday laws, evidence on that point is not relevant,¹⁵ and, even where the fact appears from the testimony, such fact must be disregarded if not warranted by the allegations.¹⁶

There is other authority holding that, in order that an illegal Sunday contract may be treated as unenforceable, no allegation of illegality need be made by the pleadings, the court being bound to give effect to the statute, although the issue is not raised by the parties.¹⁷ Elsewhere it has been held that, in the absence of a sufficient pleading of the illegality, there is no compulsion on the trial judge to recognize the question of illegality under the Sunday laws as being in the case, and his refusal to do so will be accepted as final,¹⁸ but that, at least where plaintiff's own testimony shows illegal execution on Sunday, the court has the discretion to declare the contract void, even though no issue with respect thereto is raised by the pleadings.¹⁹

A plea of nonassumpsit has been held sufficient to raise an issue of a renewal of a contract by a promise to pay on a subsequent secular day.²⁰ Where the statutes with respect to pleading render a reply or replication unavailable, matters properly pleadable at common law by reply may be testified to without any allegations concerning them in the pleadings.²¹ Where the specification of plaintiff's claim is limited to a statement of a cause of action, illegal and unenforceable by virtue of the Sunday laws, he is not entitled to a recovery on some different theory which has not been pleaded.²² It is immaterial whether or not the parties intended a violation of the Sunday laws by acts required by contract to be done on that day, and a refusal to submit a special issue to the jury relative to such intention is proper.²³

§ 37. — Evidence

- a. Presumptions and burden of proof
- b. Admissibility
- c. Weight and sufficiency

a. Presumptions and Burden of Proof

While an instrument dated on a Sunday will be presumed to have been delivered on that date, the party who seeks to have an act or instrument declared invalid under the Sunday laws has the burden of proving that it comes within the terms of the statutory prohibitions.

Subject to the rules of evidence applicable to civil actions generally, the party who desires to have an act or instrument declared invalid because entered into on Sunday has been held to have the burden of showing that it comes within the terms of the statutory prohibitions.²⁴ In order to sustain the burden of showing that the instrument or transaction comes within the statute defendant must show, by a fair preponderance of the evidence, that the instrument was fully executed or the transaction completed on Sunday, as the court will not assume that it was.²⁵ It has been held that an instrument dated on Sunday is to be presumed to have been delivered on that date, and the burden is on the party asserting its validity to show that it was in fact executed on a day other than Sunday;²⁶ and, conversely, an instrument dated on a weekday is presumed to have been delivered on that day, and the party asserting Sunday execution has the burden of proving it;²⁷ but, according to other authority, even though dated on Sunday, the presumption of validity is strong enough that the note will be presumed to have been delivered on a weekday in the absence of evidence to the contrary.²⁸

sarily, pleads that the transactions claimed to be invalid because performed on Sunday were not within exceptions to Sunday regulations, it has been held that he thereby assumes the burden of proving that fact.²⁹ According to some authority it has been held that it will not be presumed, where nothing appears to that effect, that a particular transaction sued on was outside of the exceptions specified in the statute,³⁰ or that it was consummated on Sunday so as to make it a Sunday contract or transaction;³¹ but other authority exists holding that it is not to be presumed that a contract or transaction fell within the scope of the exceptions.³²

There has been held to be no presumption that an indorsee of a Sunday note took it without notice of the illegal transaction.³³ It will be presumed where a contract contemplating Sunday performance is silent as to the place of performance that it contemplates performance in the place where it is made;³⁴ but, where the language of the contract is sufficient to sustain it, a presumption exists that the contract is to be performed where the contemplated Sunday acts are legal.³⁵ A statutory presumption in favor of validity is overcome when the party suing on a Sunday transaction by the allegations of his petition causes the invalidity to appear.³⁶ No inference that a written instrument contemplated or required illegal Sunday performance arises from a condition in such instrument whereby it may be avoided in the event of stricter local enforcement of the Sunday laws.³⁷

The rules governing admissibility of evidence in civil actions generally apply in actions on contracts or transactions claimed to be illegal under Sunday laws.

The rules with respect to the admissibility of evidence in civil actions generally, and more particularly the rules with reference to the admissibility of evidence of illegality of contracts, are applicable to actions on Sunday contracts or transactions claimed to be illegal under the Sunday laws.³⁸ As between the original parties, evidence is admissible to show that an instrument, although purporting to be of a different date, was executed on Sunday,³⁹ and vice versa.⁴⁰ Where evidence is admitted with respect to transactions on Sunday but later is withdrawn by the court from the consideration of the jury in determining whether a cause of action exists, the admission of such evidence affords no basis for complaint.⁴¹

c. Weight and Sufficiency

The weight and sufficiency of evidence to show illegality or validity of acts or transactions on a Sunday are governed by the general rules of evidence in civil actions.

The rules governing the weight and sufficiency of evidence in civil actions generally apply to actions on contracts and transactions asserted to be unenforceable by operation of the Sunday laws.⁴² Clear proof of violation of the Sunday laws must be produced by the party charged with the burden of establishing the invalidity of the transaction.⁴³ Matters capable of proof should be shown by satisfactory evidence and not left to mere inference.⁴⁴ Where the complaint alleges and the pleading admits delivery of an instrument on a secular day, the state of the pleadings renders it necessary that the proof of Sunday execution, if that is claimed, be so clear as to leave no room for doubt.⁴⁵

§ 38. — Trial, Judgment and Review

In actions involving contracts executed or to be performed on Sunday, questions of fact ordinarily are for the jury under proper instructions by the court.

In the same manner and to the same extent as in other civil actions, in actions on or involving Sunday contracts or transactions or contracts contemplating Sunday performance, questions of law are ordinarily for the court and questions of fact for the jury.⁴⁶ For instance, it has been held to be within the province of the jury to determine whether transactions were closed on Sunday,⁴⁷ whether the subsequent conduct of the parties sufficiently makes out a ratification⁴⁸ or new contract,⁴⁹ and whether a person to whom an instrument was delivered on Sunday was plaintiff's or defendant's agent.⁵⁰

As in other cases, where the question of the existence of an offense involves the determination of whether particular acts done on Sunday constitute matter of necessity or charity, its determination is ordinarily a question of fact for the jury,⁵¹ but may be a question of law for the court.⁵² The weight of the evidence is for the jury and not for the court.⁵³ Where there is evidence tending to show a renewal or ratification on a subsequent day sufficient to cause the existence of an enforceable obligation, it is improper to nonsuit plaintiff.⁵⁴

54. Ga.—Smith Motor Car Co. v. Goddard, 156 S.E. 724, 42 Ga.App. 560.

Similarly, the propriety and correctness of instructions are to be determined by the rules generally applicable to civil cases.⁵⁵ An instruction that no recovery may be had on Sunday agreements is justified by evidence tending to prove that the agreement in question was made on Sunday.⁵⁶ If an instruction, considered as a whole, is correct, the fact that certain isolated parts, withdrawn from the context, misstate the law is not fatal,⁵⁷ particularly where such misstatement is by inference only and under the facts developed could have no possible misleading tendency.⁵⁸

Although they are correct in the abstract, if instructions as given, under the particular facts, tend to mislead the jury and to prejudice one of the parties to the suit, it is improper to give them;⁵⁹ and a refusal to give such instructions, when requested, is proper.⁶⁰ Where the evidence is in conflict on the issue of illegality, the general affirmative charge should not be given;⁶¹ but an instruction to disregard testimony of Sunday execution, unsupported by the pleadings, has been held proper.⁶² If the court undertakes to instruct with respect to Sunday laws, although the issue is not raised by the pleadings, it must instruct completely and correctly concerning the effect of such laws.^{62½} An instruction with respect to the invalidity of Sunday contracts is erroneous where it omits to instruct with reference to an issue of ratification or renewal which has been properly and sufficiently raised.⁶³

A general verdict of the jury against defendant is a sufficient finding that the particular contract involved was within the exceptions stated in the Sunday laws, that issue having been properly raised by the pleadings.⁶⁴ A finding that an insurance policy was mailed on Saturday does not require a conclusion that it was issued on Sunday.⁶⁵

Special verdict, being found for defendant on the issue of illegal Sunday execution, goes to defeat the whole action and renders it unnecessary that any findings be made with respect to other defenses submitted.⁶⁶

Motion to modify judgment. Where the matter of illegality because of the Sunday laws is raised for the first time by a motion to modify the judgment, after the time to move for a new trial has gone by, the court is not obliged to reopen the case so as to let in the defense.⁶⁷

B. INJURIES RECEIVED OR INFLICTED ON SUNDAY

§ 39. Resultant Rights and Liabilities

Generally, one who is injured or damaged while violating a Sunday law is not barred from recovery by such illegal conduct.

By the great weight of authority, it is held that a person injured or damaged while violating a Sunday law is not barred from recovery by such illegal conduct on his part, since such violation is not the efficient or proximate cause of the injury, or an essential element of the cause of action, and the time when the injury was inflicted is only incident to, and not the foundation of, the action.⁶⁸ However, in a few jurisdictions, it has been held that no liability attaches for injuries to person or property received by one who is violating the Sabbath laws, and as a consequence of his conduct, since his own illegal act necessarily contributes to the injury;⁶⁹ but, at least in some of the jurisdictions where this rule was formerly followed, it has since been superseded by positive statutory enactment providing otherwise;⁷⁰ and, even in the absence of such statute, the illegal conduct did not prevent recovery for injuries which the act being done had no tendency to produce, and as to which it was a mere condition and not a contributory cause.⁷¹

Under the majority rule, the existence of a contract between plaintiff and defendant, in pursuance of which plaintiff's illegal acts were being done, does not prevent a recovery for defendant's breach of duty causing injury independently of the contract;⁷² furthermore, persons jointly engaged in a violation of the Sunday laws are not prevented by their joint unlawful enterprise from recovering from those with whom they are acting where the other elements for recovery exist.⁷³ In some jurisdictions, where the majority rule prevails, it has been held that a person engaged in employment or other conduct on the Sabbath, in violation of a statute, is not liable for injuries inflicted by him without other fault or negligence on his part;⁷⁴ but, under the minority rule, a result to the contrary has been reached,⁷⁵ and this is true in some jurisdictions which follow the majority rule with respect to its effect as a defense.⁷⁶ Where the action engaged in, at the time of injury, by the person injured or inflicting the injury is not unlawful under the Sunday statutes, the rights and liabilities arising therefrom are not different from those in the case of a similar injury on any other day, and the time of the injury is immaterial.⁷⁷

Clause in insurance policy. It has been held that a person injured while engaging in unlawful conduct, such as traveling or hunting on the Sabbath, cannot recover on an accident insurance policy, which expressly excepts from its operation injuries resulting from, or effected by, a violation of law;⁷⁸ but, according to other authority, such a clause does not limit recovery for injuries resulting in the course of Sunday law violations, but is designed to comprehend only acts which will avoid the risk if done at any time;⁷⁹ and if the act done is within the exceptions to the Sunday regulations, so as to be no violation, its performance is no objection to recovery.⁸⁰

Effect on other defenses. The status of persons occupying such a relationship to a common employer that they would be considered fellow servants, so as to make the fellow servant doctrine applicable as a defense, on a weekday, is not altered and their relationship and the availability of the defense are the same, although at the time of injury they are engaged in doing for the common employer acts illegal under the Sunday statutes.⁸¹ It has been held that a contractual limitation of liability is valid where the acts performed on Sunday are not in violation of the Sunday laws.⁸²

Sunday law as justification for failure to act. Where a defense is grounded on plaintiff's inaction, the defense, if otherwise sufficient, is not avoided by the fact that action, in order to have prevented the loss, would have required the doing of acts on Sunday, at least where the action, if done, would not have required any violation of the Sunday laws.⁸³

§ 40. Actions

The general rules governing actions for injury or damage apply in actions for injuries or damage received or inflicted on Sunday.

As in other civil actions, where the complaint for injuries received on a Sunday sets out a cause of action a general demurrer thereto will not be sustained.⁸⁴

In jurisdictions holding the illegality of plaintiff's conduct in violation of a Sunday law a sufficient defense, it has been held that the defense need not be specially raised but is available under a general denial of a petition alleging that plaintiff was in the exercise of due care when injured.⁸⁵ Where a violation of the Sunday statute precludes a person from recovering for injuries received on that day, there is authority holding that the burden of proof is on him to show that the work in which he was engaged was a work of necessity or charity,⁸⁶ and numerous decisions exist holding the evidence in particular cases to be sufficient⁸⁷ or insufficient⁸⁸ for that purpose.

According to other authority, however, where defendant seeks to defend on the ground that plaintiff was, at the time of the injury, engaged in illegal conduct, the fact that the conduct in question was illegal must be affirmatively established by the party asserting it in defense.⁸⁹ The question of whether plaintiff was engaged in an act of necessity or charity, when it becomes an issue in actions of this nature, is ordinarily for the jury to determine;⁹⁰ but, where there is no evidence sufficient to warrant a finding that the circumstances make out a case of necessity or charity, the matter should be determined by the court and the instructions framed accordingly.⁹¹ Similarly, it is for the jury to determine, when material, at what hour of the day the injury occurred.⁹²

In jurisdictions where the illegality defeats the action, refusal to instruct on the matter, where the issue is properly raised by the pleadings and the evidence, is error;⁹³ but the contrary is true in jurisdictions where that circumstance is insufficient as a defense;⁹⁴ and the trial court should not submit to the jury the question whether the unlawful working on Sunday was the proximate cause of the injury, but should instruct it that it constitutes no defense.⁹⁵

In states where the majority rule, of the immateriality of the Sunday violation as a defense to actions for injuries, is followed, pleas or answers relying on such matter as a defense have been held subject to demurrer;⁹⁶ and, where such violation is not of itself sufficient to create liability for injuries, a petition relying on it as the sole basis of recovery is demurrable.⁹⁷ Where even illegal Sunday conduct is not a matter of defense, the question whether the particular acts being engaged in at the time of the injury were within the exceptions of the Sunday laws is immaterial.⁹⁸

What law governs. The question of the effect of illegal Sunday action at the time of injury is to be governed by the law of the place where the injury occurred.⁹⁹

IV. JUDICIAL AND OFFICIAL ACTS AND PROCEEDINGS

§ 41. In General

It is a generally recognized rule that at common law Sunday is dies non juridicus; hence, no judicial act or proceeding could be done or had on that day; in some jurisdictions statutes have reaffirmed the common-law rule in whole or in part.

Although it has been held that common law arising from usage in contradistinction to derivation from the English common-law system does not make Sunday a nonjudicial day,¹ it is the generally recognized rule that at common law Sunday is dies non juridicus,² and that, hence, no judicial act or proceeding could be done or had on that day.³ However, the prohibition of the common law extends only to judicial acts, and not to acts performed in a cause which were ministerial in their nature.⁴ In several jurisdictions statutes have been passed which reaffirm the common-law rule, in whole or in part,⁵ but exceptions to the rule have been established by statute and limitations by common law, so that the rule can no longer be universally accepted without qualification, discussed infra §§ 42-55.

Effect on term. Whether or not a term fixed for a period the last day of which falls on Sunday includes the final Sunday within the term is treated in Courts § 151 b, and the question whether intervening Sundays are to be included in computations relative to the time of the term of court is discussed in the C.J.S. title Time § 14, also 62 C.J. p 1009 notes 3, 4.

§ 42. Civil Process

- a. In general
- b. Service

a. In General

In the absence of permissive statute it is generally held that the issuance of process on Sunday is void, although there is some authority to the contrary. Generally a process returnable on Sunday is void.

There is some authority holding that, although the award of judicial writs is a judicial act, void if done on Sunday, the issuing of original process is merely ministerial and valid in the absence of a statutory provision forbidding it,⁶ but there is more numerous authority holding the issuance of process to be a judicial act, and, hence, of such a character that its being done on Sunday is void at common law.⁷ Where the rule forbidding and avoiding issuance of process on Sunday has been affirmed or adopted by statute, process within the terms of

Power of legislature

(1) The legislature has the power of declaring Sunday to be dies juridicus.—Pedersen v. Logan Square State & Savings Bank, 36 N.E.2d 732, 377 Ill. 408—Langabier v. Fairbury, etc., R. Co., 64 Ill. 243, 16 Am.R. 550—60 C.J. p 1137 note 37 [b].

the prohibitions when issued on that day is a nullity.⁸ Express exceptions in statutes forbidding service of process on Sunday have been held not alone applicable to service of process but are equally exceptions to the common-law rule forbidding issuance of process on Sunday.⁹ Since, as a general rule, courts may not sit on Sunday, a process or notice returnable on that day is void, and no proceedings may be had thereon.¹⁰

Injunction. A writ of injunction may issue on Sunday in cases of urgent necessity notwithstanding the general invalidity of process issued on that day.¹¹ Where statutes specifically authorize the granting of writs of injunction on Sunday under certain conditions, it is for the judge before whom application is made to determine the sufficiency of the facts and the affidavit to bring the case within the statutory conditions.¹²

Arrest. An arrest in a civil cause made on Sunday was good at common law,¹³ but has been held bad under statutes forbidding the service on Sunday of the process on which the arrest is based,¹⁴ and in jurisdictions adopting as a part of their common law the doctrine that such service is void,¹⁵ and, of course, where statutes specifically prohibit and avoid arrest on that day.¹⁶

b. Service

Generally the service of process on Sunday is valid in the absence of statutes forbidding such service.

The service of process has been held to be a merely ministerial act, being thus of such a character that Sunday service is not affected by the common-law status of Sunday as a nonjudicial day.¹⁷ Under the statutes of many jurisdictions, however, the service of process on Sunday is specially forbidden,¹⁸ and such service as is within the scope of their provisions is of course illegal and void.¹⁹ Moreover, in other jurisdictions, the pro-

In New York

(1) It has been held that process or notice bad for that reason is so utterly void that it is incapable of amendment.—Taft v. Delsener, 25 N.Y.S.2d 582, 175 Misc. 894—State Bank v. Spence, 76 N.Y.S. 984, 37 Misc. 854.

(2) However, it has been held that, while it is irregular to make any process returnable on Sunday, this is a mere technical objection; and, in an ordinary case, the court would permit an amendment of the process to promote the purposes of justice.—Boyd v. Vanderkemp, 1 Barb. Ch. 273.

In Montana

(1) Under statute providing that no court must be open, nor must any judicial business be transacted, on Sunday with certain exceptions, but injunctions, writs of prohibition, and habeas corpus may be issued and served on any day, it has been assumed that the personal service of other process than that named was forbidden as the transaction of judicial business, and, as case involved service by publication, the court stated that it would be pointless to discuss validity of personal service of process on Sunday under either common law or statutes and decisions cited, or to express an opinion whether personal service of process is judicial or merely a ministerial act or business.—State ex rel. Fisher v. District Court of First Judicial District in and for Lewis and Clark County, 99 P.2d 211, 213, 110 Mont. 61.

(2) With respect to the law prior to the enactment of such statute, the court stated: "Prior to that time personal service of process on Sunday visions of the general Sunday laws, relative to acts and transactions generally without specific reference to the service of process, have been held extensive enough to include such service within their prohibitions so as to avoid it;²⁰ but elsewhere statutes of a similar character have been held not to include it within the scope of their provisions, so that the time of service does not impair its legality and validity;²¹ and, of course, where statutes adopt and reaffirm the rule of the common law, Sunday service of process or summons is legal.²² Some of the statutes forbidding the service of process on Sunday, either directly or as included in the general Sunday regulations, make exceptions to permit service in certain cases of urgent necessity;²³ and service of process in the cases specified is valid, although made on Sunday;²⁴ but service in cases of urgent necessity is regarded no differently from that in other cases generally where the statute specially referring, or the general statute held applicable, to service of civil process makes no exceptions under which the service can be brought.²⁵ Where a statutory prohibition on Sunday service embraces only a part of the day, service at any time on Sunday which is not so included is valid to the same extent as though made on any other day.²⁶ Statutes limiting or taking away merely the power of arrest on Sunday do not affect the service of civil process on that day.²⁷

§ 43. — Attachment; Garnishment; Bail Process

Unless authorized by statute a writ of attachment cannot issue or levy be made on Sunday where the issuance or levy is a judicial act. Garnishment proceedings may fall within a statutory exception with respect to attachment proceedings.

Unless authorized by statute²⁸ a writ of attachment cannot issue or levy be made on Sunday where the issuance or levy is a judicial act.²⁹ Where prop-had been held void in Montana under the common law, as the transaction of judicial business, Hausworth v. Sullivan, 9 P. 798, 6 Mont. 203. Later, by way of dictum in Burke v. Inter-State, S. & L. Ass'n, 64 P. 879, 25 Mont. 315, 87 Am.S.R. 416, and in State ex rel. Hay v. Alderson, 142 P. 210, 49 Mont. 387, Ann.Cas.1916B 39, service of process on Sunday was spoken of as voidable rather than void.—State ex rel. Fisher v. District Court of First Judicial District in and for Lewis and Clark County, supra—60 C.J. p 1138 note 48 [g].

(3) However, publication of summons on Sunday was held not judicial act or business under such statute, as discussed infra § 47.

Statutory authorization

A summons may be served on Sunday under authority of the statute providing that summons may be served at any time on or before return day mentioned therein and of supreme court rule using same language; and a presumption exists that the legislature and supreme court were aware of the distinction between what constituted judicial acts, which could not be performed on Sunday, and ministerial acts which could be performed on Sunday when statutes and rules as to service of summons were being drawn up, and such statutes and rules cannot have read into them an exception not contained in the statute, and not recognized at common law.—*Pedersen v. Requisites

Affidavit respecting necessity

(1) Affidavit by plaintiff's attorney stating belief that service could not be had on defendant in southern district of Logan County on any other day was insufficient under statute to authorize service of summons on Sunday on belief that service could not be had thereafter, since it did not show that service could not be had elsewhere in the state.—Waldron Mfg. Corp. v. Kincannon, supra.

Completion of levy on Sunday

Under the Vermont statute which prohibits the service of process between the setting of the sun on Saturday and midnight on Sunday, it has been held that, if the service is

erty has been wrongfully taken into possession of an officer under an attachment on Sunday, levies by him of other writs on the following Monday on the property while still in his possession are not absolutely void.³⁰ Where a statute makes an exception with respect to attachment proceedings on Sunday, it has been held that garnishment proceedings may fall within the exception.³¹ Bail trover process may not be executed on Sunday,³² and the execution of such process on Sunday is not authorized by an affidavit which adds nothing to the essential averment of the affidavit required by statute for bail trover generally.³³ The arrest of the principal by the surety in a bail bond given in a civil case may be made on a Sunday.³⁴

§ 44. — Execution or Final Process

There is conflicting authority as to the validity of the service or execution of final process on Sunday.

Final process, it has been held, is included within the prohibitions of statutes forbidding service or execution of process as fully as are original and mesne processes.³⁵ On the other hand, it has been held that a statute providing that no civil suit shall be instituted nor process be had in any suit on Sunday does not preclude the service of mesne or final process.³⁶ Further, although a statute prohibits the service of writs or other process on Sunday it has been held inapplicable to a case wherein property may be so frequently and swiftly moved from place to place as to evade enforcement of the law.³⁷ The return of an execution on Sunday is void.³⁸

§ 45. Criminal Process

At common law and also commonly under the Sunday statutes, warrants may issue and arrests or other appropriate execution be made on Sunday, as for treason, felony, and breach of the peace.

Although statutes with respect to issuance or service on Sunday of civil process have no application to the issuance and execution of warrants;³⁹ at common law and also commonly under the Sunday statutes, warrants may issue⁴⁰ and arrests or other appropriate execution be made on Sunday.⁴¹ In some jurisdictions, however, the issuance or service of a warrant on the Sabbath is forbidden and declared void by statute,⁴² but exception is frequently made in their provisions of cases of treason, felony, and breach of the peace, and warrants or arrests coming within the terms of such exceptions are in no way adversely affected by the statutes.⁴³ The phrase "treason, felony, and breach of the peace" has been interpreted to include all criminal or indictable offenses,⁴⁴ and, under such an interpretation, breach of the peace is not limited to an offense causing or tending to cause a public disturbance.⁴⁵ However, under a similar statute, it has been held that in order to constitute a breach begun before sunset on Saturday evening, it may be completed afterward, the statute referring merely to the commencement of the service. — Fifield v. Wooster, 21 Vt. 215.

Selling of alcoholic beverages

Keeping for sale or the selling of alcoholic beverages, without first having obtained a license to do so, was a "breach of the peace" within meaning of statute providing that no person or persons, on the Lord's day, shall serve or execute, or cause to be served, any writ, process, warrant, order, judgment, or decree except in cases of treason, felony, or "breach of the peace."—Edwards v. District of Columbia, supra.

of the peace there must be some violation of public order, disturbance of public tranquility, or some act or conduct inciting to violence or tending to provoke or incite others to break the peace,⁴⁶ and, under such an interpretation, the statute does not permit the issuance and service of a warrant for a mere misdemeanor not involving a breach of the peace.⁴⁷

Under statutes particularly authorizing and providing for issuance of warrants or arrests on Sunday, such action is valid.⁴⁸ Further, although speaking only of the execution of process as by arrest, such statutes or exceptions are sufficient to authorize the issuance of warrants for the same offenses as those for which arrest is authorized.⁴⁹

§ 46. — Search Warrants

At common law and also commonly under the Sunday statutes, a search warrant may issue and be executed on Sunday.

At common law and also commonly under the Sunday statutes, a search warrant may issue⁵⁰ and be executed⁵¹ on Sunday.⁵² However, under a statute prohibiting the issuance of a warrant except in cases of treason, felony, and breach of the peace, it has been held that a search warrant may be issued and executed only where the warrant comes within the terms of the exceptions,⁵³ and, in a case not involving treason or a felony, or in the absence of a breach of the peace, the service of a search warrant on Sunday is illegal and void.⁵⁴

publication for the appointment of a receiver pendente lite has been held not invalid because served on Sunday,⁵⁶ and it has been held that the notice of a hearing, served on a weekday, is good, although it has been dated on Sunday;⁵⁷ and, similarly, a notice that a certain witness, not named in the indictment, will be examined at the trial has been held good, where not prohibited by statute, although given on Sunday, being a ministerial act.⁵⁸ The proceeding to effect a statutory foreclosure of a mortgage, not being a judicial proceeding, has been held not to be invalidated by the fact that the day appointed for the sale in the published notice is a Sunday, particularly if such sale could lawfully be made on that day.⁵⁹ Despite statutory prohibitions of service or execution of any writ, process, warrant, or order on Sunday, notice of injury may be effectively given to a municipality on Sunday, at least where that is not the last day of the time appointed for the giving of notice, such notice not being legal process.⁶⁰ On the other hand, it has been held that, under statutory prohibitions affecting Sunday service or execution of process, orders, and the like, the service on Sunday of notice of a motion,⁶¹ or of a statutory notice which is required to be served in the same manner as a precept in summary proceedings,⁶² is irregular and void; and the same result has been reached as to a notice to take a deposition on Sunday, even though no special prohibition by common law or statute is applicable.⁶³ Where a statute respecting service of notice of redemption from tax sales provides for service in the same manner as an original notice, Sunday service is bad when made in such manner that original notice, served in the same way, would be bad.⁶⁴

b. Publications

The publication of a summons or other legal notice on Sunday is valid in the absence of statutes prohibiting the service of process on Sunday, and, even where Sunday publication is void under the statutes, publication on that day of a notice which in nature has none of the attributes of process may be valid.

Where, by force of prevailing statutes, service of process on Sunday is illegal, the publication, in whole or in part, of a summons or other legal notice in a newspaper published on Sunday is invalid,⁶⁵ except where the statutes provide otherwise;⁶⁶ but, where there is no statute rendering unlawful the service on Sunday of civil process, and no such rule has been adopted as a part of the local common law, a contrary result is reached.⁶⁷ However, even where Sunday publication is void under the statutes, publication on that day of a notice which in nature has none of the attributes of process may be valid.⁶⁸

Excuse for nonpublication. A notice required to be published each day for a week need not be published on Sunday.⁶⁹

isterial, rather than judicial, act, and hence not void at common law,⁷¹ and, further, constituting matter of necessity or charity, and hence being permitted by the Sunday statutes.⁷² Moreover, it has been held that statutory authorization to execute process or warrant on Sunday extends to authorize giving of bail in cases as to which such extension is authorized.⁷³ Under statutes authorizing holding court and conducting trials on Sunday, recognizances and appearance bonds executed on that day have been held valid.⁷⁴

In some jurisdictions the rule of the validity of Sunday bonds has been extended to undertakings on appeal and appeal bonds;⁷⁵ but other authority holds such bonds, executed on Sunday, invalid for the same reason and to the same extent as other contracts made on Sunday.⁷⁶ It has been held that a bond given on Sunday in pursuance of the execution of a writ or process on that day, if that execution is a nullity, should be canceled.⁷⁷

Although there is authority to the contrary,⁷⁸ it has been held that a supersedeas bond signed on Sunday but not delivered until a subsequent secular day is valid and binding;⁷⁹ and the same has been held as to replevin bonds.⁸⁰ However, it has been held that a replevin bond actually executed on Sunday is invalidated by provisions in the general Sunday observance laws which render Sunday contracts illegal.⁸¹

§ 49. Filing Pleadings and Other Papers

The filing of pleadings and other papers on Sunday has been held valid under various statutory provisions.

The filing of pleadings and other papers on Sunday has been held valid under various statutory provisions.⁸² Thus, there is authority to the effect that the filing of a complaint and its reception by the clerk are ministerial acts, and are not void when done on Sunday, under statutes prohibiting the opening of courts and the transaction of judicial business.⁸³ Neither is an information void because it was filed on Sunday under a statute prohibiting only the commencement of civil suits,⁸⁴ or forbidding arrests on Sunday, save for treason, felony, or breach of the peace, where the information charges an offense of the character excepted;⁸⁵ and an indictment presented and filed on a weekday is not invalidated by the fact that it is dated as having been drawn on a Sunday.⁸⁶ The mere filing of an affidavit and bond on Sunday does not come within the meaning of a statute prohibiting the issuance of process,⁸⁷ and the filing of papers ancillary to, or in the progress of, an already instituted suit is not within a statutory prohibition of the commencement of a civil suit on Sunday.⁸⁸ An affidavit dated on Sunday but actually made on another day has been held valid.⁸⁹

been held that the adjournment of the taking of depositions from Saturday to Sunday and from Sunday to Monday is, at least in the absence of some special necessity, without authority of law, and a deposition on the latter day will be suppressed.⁹²

§ 51. Holding Court

As a general rule, in the absence of a permissive statute, a judge or magistrate has no authority to hold court or conduct a trial on Sunday, or deliver a charge to the jury on that day; but deliberation by the jury on Sunday is not illegal and the delivery and acceptance of a verdict are permitted on Sunday.

Although there is authority to the contrary,⁹³ in the absence of a permissive statute, a judge or magistrate has no authority to hold court or conduct a trial on Sunday;⁹⁴ but even where a trial is conducted on Sunday, it has been held that the court does not thereby lose jurisdiction of the cause.⁹⁵ Where a permissive statute exists, the right to hold court is determined by the statute, and, such conduct being authorized, the trial and proceedings had with respect thereto are valid.⁹⁶ Under a statute providing that a court shall not be opened, or any business transacted on Sunday, except to receive a verdict or discharge a jury and for receipt by a court of special sessions of a plea of guilty and the pronouncement of sentence thereon in any case in which such court shall have jurisdiction, and further providing that this provision does not prevent the exercise of the jurisdiction of a magistrate, where it is necessary to preserve the peace, or in a criminal case, to arrest, commit, or discharge a person charged with an offense, the court cannot try and convict a person on Sunday.⁹⁷ However, under such statute, a court sitting as a court of special sessions and having jurisdiction can receive a plea of guilty,⁹⁸ and pronounce sentence thereon, as discussed infra § 53, since arraignment, plea of guilty, and sentence do not constitute a trial within the statute.⁹⁹

Personal liability of justice. A justice of the peace who in good faith and without malice illegally sits on Sunday and proceeds with the hearing of a matter over which he has jurisdiction both of the person and the subject matter is not liable personally, even though his acts were erroneous and of no effect, since he is acting judicially in holding court.¹

Charging jury. Delivery of the charge to the jury on Sunday has been held to be a judicial act and void,² as has completion of a charge the de-

Prior to statutory amendment, some confusion existed as just what a court could or could not do on Sunday. Despite the diversity of opinion on the part of the courts, the prevailing opinions were more or less in accord that the acts of a court of special sessions in arraigning defendant and accepting plea of guilty and imposing sentence on Sunday were void.—People v. Jackson, 77 N. Y.S.2d 478, 191 Misc. 457.

Purpose of statute

As the purpose of the statute is to preserve the peace and while doing so to accord to persons who might otherwise be injured by longer detention an opportunity to be heard at once, and in a proper case set at liberty, power is given by this statute to inquire into the detention, and, if nothing further is needed, to dispose of the case, although a protracted trial is not authorized.—People ex rel. Price v. Warden of New York State Reformatory for Women, 76 N.Y.S. 728, 73 App.Div. 174—People v. Jackson, 77 N.Y.S.2d 478, 191 Misc. 457.

Expiration of term

Charging jury on Sunday in murder prosecution could not be justified on ground that term of court expired on that day and a term of court began in another county in same judicial district on following day, where court could have extended livery of which was commenced on Saturday night.³ An exception has been made, however, of the case of a judge instructing a jury who have not agreed and who request further instructions from the court in the course of their deliberation on Sunday;⁴ and further it has been held that, during the course of Sunday deliberation by the jury, the court may call them back and give instructions designed to correct a supposed error in the charge originally given.⁵

Deliberation by jury. Deliberation of the jury throughout, or for some part of, Sunday is not illegal, since such deliberation by them is not a judicial act,⁶ even in cases where they are judges of the law as well as of the facts.⁷

Delivery and acceptance of verdict. In regard to the delivery and reception of verdicts, it is well established, both at common law and by statute, and in both civil and criminal cases, that a verdict may be delivered, received, and entered on Sunday,⁸ the result being grounded on the fact that it is a mere ministerial act, not within common-law or statutory prohibitions as to judicial proceedings on Sunday,⁹ and that the rendition or receiving of a verdict is a work of charity or necessity within the statutory exceptions.¹⁰ It has also been held that the action of the jury in agreeing on a verdict and sealing it up on Sunday does not invalidate the verdict delivered on Monday.¹¹

Where a term of court expires by its legal limitation on Saturday, a verdict received on Sunday is invalid;¹² but, where the term has been continued or extended by proper court order so as to embrace Sunday, the verdict is good.¹³ A general verdict is not nullified by the fact that the court has submitted special interrogatories to the jury on Sunday, and has received their answer to such interrogatories with the general verdict on that day, where the interrogatories were with respect to the same state of facts as that on which the general verdict was returned, but were not designed for use in the same case and had no relation to the trial or verdict therein.¹⁴

Continuations and adjournments. The continuing of a cause from Saturday to Monday so as to retain jurisdiction of the pending case does not constitute a keeping open of the court on Sunday.¹⁵ When, by mistake, a hearing is set for Sunday, the meeting of the court on that day, and its adjournment over until the next day without performance of any business other than the mere adjournment has been held not to invalidate the proceedings but to be a mere nullity.¹⁶ After verdict received on Sunday, the court may adjourn until a later day for further proceedings thereon, without invalidating the proceedings.¹⁷

Adjournment of court to Sunday in violation of a statute requiring adjournment on Saturday to some other day than Sunday deprives the court of jurisdiction and renders its judgment absolutely void,¹⁸ although it has been held lawful for a court to adjourn to Sunday for the purpose of receiving a verdict.¹⁹ Even where holding court on Sunday is held not forbidden by common law or statute, where there is a long standing usage or practice of the courts to the same effect, it has been held proper to adjourn from Saturday to Monday, even though the statute authorizes only an adjournment "from day to day."²⁰ Where a term of court expires of its legal limitation on Saturday, the power to continue to hold court on Sunday is subject to term until case was disposed of.—Guerrera v. State, supra.

the general rules regarding the effect of the expiration of the term.²¹

§ 52. — Discharge of Jury

Generally the court may, on Sunday, adjudicate the fact that the jury cannot agree and discharge them, and a discharge of the jury on verdict delivered and received on Sunday is valid.

While it has been held that, no such power having been given by statute, the court is powerless to discharge a jury on Sunday save after their agreement on a verdict or in case of some immediate necessity,²² it is more generally held that the court may, on Sunday, adjudicate the fact that the jury cannot agree and discharge them;²³ but the power may be exercised only when the elements essential to such discharge at any other time are present.²⁴ Of course, discharge of the jury on verdict delivered and received on a Sunday is valid.²⁵

§ 53. Judgment, Order, or Decree, and Proceedings for Review

Generally, in the absence of a permissive statute, the rendition of a judgment, order, or decree being a judicial act, it is void when done on Sunday.

Although there is authority to the contrary,²⁶ as the rendition of a judgment, order, or decree is a judicial act, it is, in the absence of statute, void when done on Sunday.²⁷ Statutes directing the court or justice of the peace to render judgment immediately or forthwith establish an exception, according to some authority, in cases where the verdict is received on Sunday, and allow the immediate rendition of judgment on such verdict;²⁸ but there is other authority to the contrary.²⁹ Even when the judgment on a Sunday verdict is rendered on the same day, although it is void, it does not vitiate the verdict;³⁰ nor is it effective to prevent entry of judgment for another and different amount on a later weekday.³¹

Where a verdict is rendered on Sunday, it will be presumed, in the absence of anything to the contrary in the record, that the judgment on the verdict was rendered on a subsequent day.³² Although it has been stated by some authorities that the court may on Sunday receive or make a motion or order touching the verdict,³³ it has been held elsewhere that the decision of motions by the court is a judicial act and hence void when done on Sunday;³⁴ and Sunday entry by the clerk of an order granting a Receiving a plea of guilty and entering judgment thereon on Sunday has been held to be void as a judicial act.—Devault v. Sampson, 221 P. 284, 114 Kan. 913.

Signing decision

Fact that judge signed decision on Sunday did not invalidate judgment, since legal judgment was clerk's entry, made on Friday.—Board of Sup'rs of Apache County v. Udall, 1 P.2d 343, 38 Ariz. 497.

Quasi-judicial proceeding

Judgment rendered on Sunday in a quasi-judicial proceeding is void.—Texas State Board of Dental Examiners v. Fieldsmith, Tex. Civ.App., 242 S.W.2d 213, error refused no reversible error.

Void on face

Where record showed that divorce decree from which appeal was prosecuted was rendered and filed on particular date, court would take judicial notice that such date was Sunday and that decree was, therefore, void on its face.—Shade v. Shade, 39 So.2d 785, 252 Ala. 134.

motion for a new trial, which order was actually made on Sunday, has been held a judicial act and void,³⁵ even though the order was for an entry nunc pro tunc, and the entry was accordingly made as of another day.³⁶

Where a statute provides that a court shall not be opened, or any business be transacted on Sunday, except to receive a verdict or discharge a jury and for receipt by a court of special sessions of a plea of guilty and the pronouncement of sentence thereon in any case in which such court shall have jurisdiction, and further provides that this provision does not prevent the exercise of the jurisdiction of a magistrate, where it is necessary to preserve the peace, or in a criminal case, to arrest, commit, or discharge a person charged with an offense, the pronouncement of a sentence on Sunday after the trial of a contested case is void,³⁷ although a committing magistrate, when it is necessary to preserve the peace, in a criminal case may arrest, commit, or discharge accused on Sunday,³⁸ and a court having the jurisdiction of a court of special sessions may accept plea of guilty and pronounce sentence.³⁹

Spreading of judgment on the records by the clerk is a ministerial, not a judicial, act, and is not void because performed on Sunday,⁴⁰ and this is true, even though it is held that the clerk's action is a necessary preliminary to the existence of any judgment.⁴¹

Proceedings for review. It has been held that an appeal may be taken on Sunday,⁴³ and that an application for a writ of error may be lawfully filed on Sunday,⁴⁴ but there is other authority to the effect that, in the absence of a showing of necessity, a bill of exceptions is void when signed on Sunday,⁴⁵ and it has been held that a record on appeal cannot be filed with the clerk on Sunday.⁴⁶ A clerk of court is not bound to take appeals on Sunday when not required to by statute.⁴⁷ An appeal or writ of error cannot be made returnable on Sunday and to make it so avoids it.⁴⁸ Service on Sunday on a justice of the peace of certiorari is void under a statute prohibiting service or execution of civil process on that day, although the justice's fees were not paid until a subsequent secular day.⁴⁹

§ 54. Arbitration and Award

There is a conflict of authority with respect to the validity of making and publishing an award on Sunday.

Although the making and publishing of an award have been considered a judicial act and hence void when done on Sunday,⁵⁰ it has also been regarded as more in the nature of a contract and not within the prohibition of judicial business.⁵¹ Where considered as judicial in nature, however, an award may be valid when not really published until a weekday, even though some of the proceedings were had on Sunday,⁵² although it has been held not to be, despite the lawful publication, if sessions are held and witnesses required to attend on Sunday over the objections of either of the parties to the arbitration.⁵³

§ 55. Miscellaneous Matters of Judicial or Official Nature

The performance of various miscellaneous matters of a judicial or official nature on Sunday has been considered by the courts and has been held prohibited or not prohibited depending on the terms of the statutes and the circumstances of the particular case.

The performance of various miscellaneous matters of a judicial or official nature on Sunday has been considered by the courts and has been held prohibited⁵⁴ or not prohibited⁵⁵ depending on the circumstances and law applicable to the particular case. Thus, it has been held, under a statute forbidding common labor of one's usual avocation, that Sunday work by an assessor incidental to the assessment of taxes is incapable of serving as the basis for a claim for compensation, being within the prohibition,⁵⁶ and not being, in the absence of exceptional circumstances, a work of necessity;⁵⁷ and it has been held that the goods of a tenant are privileged on Sunday from seizure for rent, and that hence a landlord cannot lawfully distrain on that day;⁵⁸ and that the impounding of swine running at large on Sunday by a hogreeve is work or business of a secular calling, within the Sunday laws.⁵⁹

However, it has been held that statutory prohibitions of labor or common labor on Sunday have no application to the acts of public officers in the performance of their official duties,⁶⁰ and that statutory prohibitions on the exercise of a "common avocation" on Sunday do not apply to acts performed in the line of official duty by a governor⁶¹ or by members of the legislature.⁶² Where the statutes forbid service of process on Sunday, the sheriff is not bound to keep his office open to receive orders to serve, and any such order given on that day is a nullity.⁶³ The summoning on Sunday by the sheriff of jurors for a special venire has been held not objectionable where the only acts which are prohibited and void on that day are judicial acts, the conduct of the sheriff being merely ministerial in nature.⁶⁴ According to some authority, a coroner's inquest is ministerial in nature and valid.⁶⁵ In the absence of statutory prohibition, the commissioner of the general land office, it has been held, is not forbidden to keep his office open or to perform his official duties on Sunday;⁶⁶ and an application to purchase lands is not void because received and filed on Sunday, but is as valid as though all transactions occurred on a weekday.⁶⁷ It has been held that there is nothing unlawful in the registration of voters' names

Work of necessity. A district attorney has been held entitled to recover extra compensation for services performed on Sunday, the necessity of which is certified in the manner required by statute for the recovery of extra compensation by such officials.⁷⁰ Even if within the statutory prohibitions, the work of prison guards on Sunday is legal as a work of necessity within the statutory exceptions.⁷¹

§ 56. Proceedings to Assert Defects; Waiver of Defects

Where jurisdiction is alleged to be lacking by reason of the acts having been performed on a Sunday, the question may be raised by plea in abatement or other appropriate manner. There is a conflict of authority as to whether the defect or irregularity may be waived.

Where jurisdiction is lacking by reason of the process being void for issuance or service on Sunday, the question may be raised in any manner appropriate for the submission of the question of want of jurisdiction generally.⁷² Thus, where it appears on its face that process has been issued on Sunday, it has been stated that that will justify its being quashed;⁷³ advantage may be taken of such a defect, it has been held, by a plea in abatement;⁷⁴ but, where it bears the appearance of having been issued on another day, it has been held that, issuance being a judicial act, the court has no jurisdiction to compel the person issuing it to amend it to express the true date, or grant a motion to quash pursuant to such amendment.⁷⁵ A plea, alleging defective process, by virtue of the general Sunday observance laws, must allege facts sufficient to bring the acts relative to process within those laws, in order to be sustainable;⁷⁶ further, no intendment will be taken in favor of a plea in abatement based on the defective service, but every reasonable intendment will be made in favor of the regularity and sufficiency of the proceedings.⁷⁷ It has been held that, where issuance or service of process on Sunday is set up by plea, the existence of circumstances bringing it within applicable exceptions or otherwise justifying the Sunday action may be pleaded to support it by replication.⁷⁸

It has been held that the objection cannot be raised for the first time on appeal,⁷⁹ but that the irregularity is waived by appearance and going to trial without objection.⁸⁰ A general notice of retainer of an attorney is not an appearance, so as to amount to a waiver of the right to object to the Sunday proceedings.⁸¹ The right to question the legality of an arrest has been held waived by giving bail,⁸² and the right to question the propriety of holding a magistrate's court is waived by pleading guilty and paying a fine.⁸³ On the other hand, it has been held that the irregularity cannot be waived.⁸⁴ The defect being destruc-

In Alaska

(1) It has been held that the service of an order of arrest in a civil action on Sunday is void, and is not waived by appearance and giving

tive of jurisdiction, refusal of the court to dismiss the action for illegality of Sunday process does not preclude the courts of another state from independent consideration and determination of the validity and effect of the Sunday process.⁸⁵

In criminal cases it has been held that the irregularity may be inquired into on certiorari where the irregularity forms a part of the record, at least under special statutory certiorari authorizing the specification of such error.⁸⁶ It has been held that prohibition is a proper way to raise the issue of invalid Sunday service of a summons.⁸⁷ In some cases the defect arising through proceedings having been had on Sunday has been considered and relief afforded on habeas corpus;⁸⁸ and it has been held that erroneously holding court on Sunday may be taken advantage of by appeal,⁸⁹ as may rendition of judgment on Sunday.⁹⁰

The burden of proof that publication was so made on Sunday as to be invalid is on the party asserting that fact;⁹¹ and, where a judgment is objected to as having been rendered on Sunday, the presumption favoring the validity of judgment requires that, in order for it to be held void, the evidence must clearly establish without doubt that it was so rendered.⁹² Where the record shows that the trial was fully completed on Saturday, defendant cannot attack the proceedings, without seeking a correction of the record, by an assertion that proceedings were had on Sunday.⁹³

An appeal made returnable on Sunday is subject to a motion to dismiss.⁹⁴

§ 57. Proceedings on Saturday against Persons Observing Seventh Day

By statute it is an offense maliciously to procure service of process on Saturday, or to serve process returnable on Saturday, or maliciously to procure adjournment of a cause to Saturday, where the adverse party is one who observes that day as a day of worship.

By statute it has been made an offense maliciously to procure the service of process on Saturday, or to serve process returnable on Saturday, or maliciously to procure adjournment of a cause to Saturday, where the adverse party is one who observes that day as a day of worship;⁹⁵ where the statute is violated, the process illegally served or returnable on that day is void;⁹⁶ but, in order that it be so, the element of malice must be present, and, in the absence of such element, the act done is no offense, and the process served or returnable on Saturday is valid.⁹⁷ Further, no act done on Saturday in the course of a judicial proceeding against a person observing that day as a day of worship is void unless it falls within the prohibitions of the statute dealing with the immunities of such persons.⁹⁸ In the absence of statute, a witness refusing to be sworn on Saturday, on the ground that it is his Sabbath, has been held subject to a fine.⁹⁹

"Sundries" means miscellanies or various items which may be considered together without being separately specified or identified.²

SUNSET. The descent of the upper limb of the sun below the horizon in the evening.³ What constitutes "sunset" within the meaning of regulations proscribing the time when hunting is permitted is treated in Game § 10 d.

SUNSTROKE. The word "sunstroke" is defined in standard dictionaries and encyclopedias,⁴ and is a popular term for insolation or heat stroke.⁵

ing the incidence of the sun's rays, the reaction of the central nervous system, the engorgement of the blood vessels of the brain, and other physical effects.⁷

The chief factor in sunstroke is the presence of great heat,⁸ and sunstroke is due to exposure to intense external heat,⁹ and is frequently precipitated by exposure to the direct rays of the sun¹⁰ or to the direct or indirect rays of a tropical sun.¹¹

While the heat to which there is exposure may be from the sun, it may also be from other causes,¹² and the same effect may be produced by heat which is not of solar origin,¹³ and sunstroke may result from exposure to any excessive heat,¹⁴ such as that of an engine room.¹⁵

As a general rule there is associated with the heat factor physical exertion¹⁶ and marked humidity.¹⁷ It is sometimes stated that sunstroke results from a combination of heat and physical exertion,¹⁸ that is,

Although "sunset" is a definite period of time at any given locality, what that time is can be known only from scientific calculations, which very few persons are capable of making. exposure to heat during fatigue,¹⁹ and a high degree of humidity of the atmosphere is one of the most important features since this hinders free evaporation from the body.²⁰

While it may be conceded²¹ that technically²² and strictly speaking²³ sunstroke is a disease²⁴ rather than an accident,²⁵ and thus not embraced within the words "bodily injury,"²⁶ it nevertheless is not regarded as a disease in the popular mind,²⁷ but as a bodily injury and an accident.²⁸ In common understanding it is considered to be a kind of violent personal injury from the very idea of sudden external force carried by the word,²⁹ and the suddenness of its approach and its catastrophic nature have caused it to be classified as an accident.³⁰

The term "sunstroke" is variously defined as meaning a condition of the body produced by great heat;³¹ a condition caused by exposure to the sun which is often fatal;³² a condition resulting from exposure to the heat of the sun or to heat from other sources;³³ certain pathological conditions re-

An old disease

Not accidental

"In Sinclair v. Maritime Pass. Ins. Co., 3 El. & El. 478, 121 Eng. Reprint, 521, it is held that sunstroke is a disease proceeding from natural causes, and not accidental. In the opinion it is said 'The disease called sunstroke, although the name would at first seem to imply something of external violence, is, so far as we are informed, an inflammatory disease of the brain, brought on by exposure to the too intense heat of the sun's rays. It is a disease to which persons exposing themselves to the sun in a tropical climate are more or less liable, just as persons exposed to the other natural causes to which we have referred are liable to disastrous consequences therefrom.'"

Sunstroke is a casualty the cause of which is not well understood and happens unexpectedly under circumstances where ordinarily a sunstroke will not occur, so that it may be said to be an unusual event not according to the usual course of things and not to be ordinarily expected; it therefore comes within the meaning of the term "accidental" as used in its popular sense.—U. sulting from exposure to solar or artificial heat;³⁴ the effect produced upon the body by exposure to intense heat, whether from the sun, from furnaces, or from the atmosphere;³⁵ the effects produced upon the central nervous system, and through it upon other organs of the body, by exposure to the sun or to overheated air;³⁶ a sudden prostration resulting from exposure to excessive heat, regardless of the source from which the heat emanates;³⁷ acute prostration from excessive heat of weather;³⁸ prostration due to exposure to intense external heat.³⁹

It is also defined as meaning an inflammatory disease of the brain, brought on by exposure to the too intense heat of the sun's rays⁴⁰ or to overheated air;⁴¹ a sudden cerebral disturbance, often with apoplectic symptoms, due to exposure to excessive heat, generally that of the sun;⁴² an affection, often fatal, due to exposure to the sun or excessive heat and marked by sudden prostration, with symptoms like those of apoplexy;⁴³ any affection produced by the action of the sun on some part of the body, especially a sudden prostration of the physical powers, with symptoms resembling those of apoplexy, occasioned by exposure to excessive heat and often terminating fatally;⁴⁴ fever due to excessive heat, but most commonly to exposure to the direct heat of the sun;⁴⁵ heat stroke, especially from direct sun rays.⁴⁶

prostration" see 39 C.J.S. p 877 note 40, and it has been held synonymous with, and has also been distinguished from, "heatstroke" see 39 C.J.S. p 877 notes 38, 39.

It has been held to be synonymous with "care" see 12 C.J.S. p 1144 note 7.3, and "guidance."⁷⁸

SUPERINTENDENT. The term "superintendent" is derived from the Latin "super" and "intendere" meaning to oversee.⁷⁹ It suggests the idea of one who superintends or of one who has general authority,⁸⁰ one who stands in relation to the particular work in the same relation that the master would stand if he were personally present,⁸¹ and implies, ex vi termini, not mere momentary usurpation, but a regular and recognized authority.⁸²

In its ordinary acceptation,⁸³ the word "superintendent" is defined as meaning one who superintends;⁸⁴ one who has the oversight and charge of something, with the power of direction;⁸⁵ a director; an overseer.⁸⁶

"Superintendent" has been held equivalent to, or synonymous with, "inspector" see 44 C.J.S. p 407 note 1, "manager" see 55 C.J.S. p 3 note 48.1, "overseer" see 67 C.J.S. p 545 note 21, and "supervisor."⁸⁷ It has been held equivalent to, and has also been distinguished from, "boss" see 11 C.J.S. p 530 note 18.

SUPERIOR. Higher in dignity, quality, or excellence;⁸⁸ belonging to a higher grade.⁸⁹

SUPERNUMERARY. A person or thing in excess of the necessary or customary number.⁹⁰

SUPERPHOSPHATE. A fertilizer prepared by treating ground bones, bone black, or phosphoric with sulphuric acid, whereby a portion of the insoluble phosphoric acid is rendered soluble in water.⁹¹

SUPERScription. An upper or outer inscription, as a title or direction; especially, an address on a letter.⁹² It has been held synonymous with "address" see 1 C.J.S. p 1460 note 61.

SUPERSEDE. The word "supersede" is defined as meaning to make void⁹³ or useless;⁹⁴ to make void, inefficacious, or useless;⁹⁵ to make void, useless,

§ 1. Definition, and Nature and Scope of Remedy

Supersedeas, which is a writ commanding a stay of proceedings, such as the execution of a judgment, is in the nature of a substitute for a bill in equity, and will be issued only where other remedies are not available.

Supersedeas or, more accurately, a writ of supersedeas is a writ which contains a command to stay some ordinary proceedings at law,¹ and is technically a writ to suspend the execution of a judgment.² While originally it was a writ directed to an officer, commanding him to desist from enforcing the execution of another writ which he was about to execute, or which might come into his hands,³ in modern times the term is often used synonymously with a "stay of proceedings;"⁴ and by an extension of the term it has come to be used as a designation of the effect of any proceeding or act in a cause, which, of its own force, causes a suspension or stay of proceedings.⁵

Supersedeas as a stay of proceedings in an inferior court pending the review of a cause is discussed generally in Appeal and Error §§ 625-679; and a stay, quashing, vacation, and other relief against execution generally is considered in Executions §§ 139-164.

Nature of remedy. A proceeding by supersedeas is not a proceeding at common law in the strict sense of that term.⁶ The writ and the proceeding on which it is founded are regarded as in the nature of a substitute for a bill in equity,⁷ where the matter of discharge set forth in the petition does not appear in the record.⁸ It has been said to be a substitute for the writ of audita querela,⁹ and that the same rules which govern the one must regulate the other, with but slight exceptions.¹⁰ The remedy is usually regarded as injunctive or prohibitive in character, and not corrective;¹¹ and it will not function as a writ of certiorari or a writ of mandamus.¹²

While a supersedeas is in one sense a continuation of the original suit,¹³ in another sense it is the commencement of a new suit, and it is generally so regarded.¹⁴ It is not the process by which the suit is prosecuted, but is collateral to the suit.¹⁵

Scope of remedy. The province of a writ of supersedeas is to prevent an abuse of the process of the court.¹⁶ It has been variously stated that its proper office and function are merely to stay proceedings;¹⁷ and that its object and purpose are to suspend the efficacy of a judgment or decree.¹⁸ The writ cannot operate as an injunction against any of the parties to an action,¹⁹ and, when allowable, is only granted in cases of necessity.²⁰

and will not be issued where other remedies are available.²¹ It is, like other original writs, to be made use of only in those cases where some unusual situation is presented which cannot well be handled otherwise;²² since if it were to issue in every case where an appeal is pending and where appellant might possibly suffer injury due to the lapse of time or other reason, its use would become well nigh universal.²³

In a proceeding for a supersedeas, that which forms the ground for relief must rest on facts accruing subsequent to the decree,²⁴ such as satisfaction;²⁵ or, if it relates to antecedent facts, it must show fraud in the decree,²⁶ or want of jurisdiction in the court, apparent on the face of the record,²⁷ or a denial of the relation which authorizes execution.²⁸

§ 2. Jurisdiction and Authority to Grant Supersedeas

A court ordinarily has authority to supersede its own executions; but whether supersedeas may be issued by an appellate court, or by a judge in vacation or at chambers, generally depends on constitutional or statutory provisions.

A court has authority, under its general powers, to supersede its own executions in a proper case, especially when it has general jurisdiction of the subject,²⁹ and the ground for jurisdiction to award the writ is the power and duty of the courts to prevent the abuse of their process when an improper or unjust use is attempted to be made of it.³⁰ It has been held that a court which has general appellate and revisory jurisdiction over inferior tribunals may exercise such power by supersedeas where no appeal or writ of error lies for the correction of judgments of such inferior tribunals.³¹ However, notwithstanding constitutional or statutory provisions authorizing the supreme court or a judge thereof to issue supersedeas, an application for a supersedeas of execution issuing on a judgment from the court below must first be made to that court, and refused by it, before the supreme court will hear such application;³² and, where an error in a default judgment is one which might be reversed in an appellate court, no supersedeas will be allowed until after motion to the lower court or judge has been made and overruled.³³ In any event, an inferior court judge has no power or jurisdiction to grant an order for supersedeas to the judgments or decrees of the supreme court.³⁴

A proceeding in supersedeas should be granted out of the court where the record on which it is procured remains, or be returnable in the same court;³⁵ it cannot be granted out of any court returnable in the same court, where the record on which it is returnable is not there,³⁶ and, if the record is not brought into the court where the writ is sued, there should be judgment against plaintiff.³⁷ However under a statute providing that a party may apply to any judge of the court for an order of supersedeas, it has been held that an application may be made to a judge of one district although the action is triable elsewhere.³⁸

In vacation or at chambers. In the absence of statutory authority, a judge cannot, in vacation or at chambers, issue writs of supersedeas staying an execution on a judgment,⁴⁰ staying proceedings on a peremptory mandamus,⁴¹ or staying all actions against one who has taken possession of lands in a condemnation proceeding.⁴² However, authority is sometimes conferred by the constitution⁴³ or by statute⁴⁴ on the supreme court, or any judge thereof, either in term or vacation to issue writs of supersedeas. Where authorized by statute, a judge may, in vacation, issue writs of supersedeas staying proceedings⁴⁵ under a judgment or an execution,⁴⁶ or staying proceedings under a previous order appointing a receiver.⁴⁷

§ 3. What May Be Superseded

Supersedeas is most frequently used to suspend executions improperly issued or where an improper or unjust use is attempted to be made of them. The writ cannot issue to supersede interlocutory orders or decrees except in so far as authorized by statute.

The writ of supersedeas is perhaps most frequently used to suspend and quash executions,⁴⁸

either when they are improperly issued⁴⁹ or where an unjust or improper use is attempted to be made of them,⁵⁰ as, for example, where a judgment on which execution is issued has been satisfied.⁵¹ The writ generally will lie in all cases where a writ of audita querela would lie at common law.⁵² Under some statutes it has been held that the use of the writ is confined to judgments and decrees in civil actions.⁵³ Supersedeas may not be used as a remedy against persons acting independently of a court and without the aid of its process.⁵⁴ After the denial of a motion for change of venue on the ground that an impartial jury could not be obtained in the county in which the crime was committed, supersedeas is properly denied.⁵⁵ Supersedeas will lie to stay proceedings pending the determination of an appeal containing issues which will become res adjudicata.⁵⁶

Interlocutory orders or decrees. Where a statute authorizes the supreme court to allow a supersedeas from a final judgment of an inferior court, no supersedeas can issue to an interlocutory order or decree.⁵⁷ However, under some statutes power is conferred on the supreme court, in term, and any of the judges, in vacation, to grant writs of su-

persedeas to interlocutory orders and decrees, as in the case of final decrees.⁵⁸ Under such statutes it has been held that the supreme court can simply suspend or supersede, for the time being, the execution of such orders and decrees as are of a nature to be actively and affirmatively enforced,⁵⁹ and are in fieri.⁶⁰

On the other hand, it has been held under such statutes that the court has no power, in this mode, to reverse the action of the inferior court, or to set aside, or annul, or supersede orders or decrees, which are merely of a negative or prohibitory character,⁶¹ or such as are intended to impound and protect property,⁶² or such as have been executed,⁶³ or the fiat of a chancellor awarding extraordinary process,⁶⁴ or an order appointing a receiver for the protection of property pendente lite.⁶⁵ However, where a receiver should not have been appointed at all, or until the issues were settled which justified his appointment, the order may be superseded,⁶⁶ as may also the void appointment of an administrator pendente lite.⁶⁷ In fact it has been said that the writ of supersedeas is the only remedy available to obtain a review of an interlocutory order, making a temporary appointment of

The court of appeals would assume jurisdiction of petition for writs of certiorari and supersedeas to supersede order of county judge appointing administrator pendente lite and order of circuit judge denying issuance of writs of certiorari and supersedeas, on the theory that if the county judge enter a void order, which he is attempting to execute, and the circuit judge to whom the case is first appealable fails to supersede it, his order denying relief is as affirmative as the county judge's in that it authorizes the enforcement of a void order.—Lewis v. Burrow, supra.

an administrator, where the court was acting illegally or in excess of its jurisdiction.⁶⁸ It has been held that a petition which seeks a writ of supersedeas and a writ of certiorari will lie as to an injunction which was beyond the power and jurisdiction of a court to issue;⁶⁹ and the fact that the issuing court failed to rule on the motion to dissolve the injunction for a lengthy period is not sufficient to defeat petitioner's right.⁷⁰ Where statutes creating a court of appeals provide that the supreme court can reach a case properly brought to the intermediate court only by certiorari, and only then after final decree of that court, it has been held that the supreme court cannot issue a supersedeas to an interlocutory order of the court of appeals.⁷¹

§ 4. Proceedings to Obtain

Rules of court as to an application for a supersedeas must be complied with, when applicable. There must be a sufficient petition in the nature of a declaration or statement of facts; and the court may inquire into the relevant facts.

The rules of court as to filing an application for a supersedeas must be complied with, when applicable.⁷² A petition for a supersedeas is sometimes regarded as in the nature of a declaration⁷³ or statement of facts,⁷⁴ and, as such, it may be pleaded or demurred to;⁷⁵ but the same strictness in pleading is not required as in an ordinary bill in equity,⁷⁶ even though, as discussed supra § 1, the writ and the proceeding may be regarded as in the nature of a bill in equity. However, the material allegations of a petition for supersedeas are required to be proved in order to authorize a judgment for petitioners thereon.⁷⁷

It has been held that the petition may ask relief in more than one cause,⁷⁸ that the pleadings must be made in the names of the parties,⁷⁹ and that the application should be addressed to the court and not to one of its members.⁸⁰ A petition for a supersedeas to prevent the sale of exempt property under execution must set forth under oath that petitioner is a resident of the state,⁸¹ and must contain a description of all his property real and personal.⁸²

Verification. It is not required that the petition presented should be verified by the oath of the person in whose name, and on whose behalf, it is filed;⁸³ any person who knows the matters set forth in the petition to be true may verify it.⁸⁴

Amendment. Since a petition is in the nature of a declaration, it may be amended by leave of court,⁸⁵ on demurrer sustained,⁸⁶ provided the amendment does not make an entirely different case.⁸⁷

68. Tenn.—Lewis v. Burrow, supra.

The terms "acting illegally" or in "excess of jurisdiction" within rule that writ of supersedeas is available to obtain review where court is acting illegally or in excess of jurisdiction mean the same thing, and "excess of jurisdiction," as distinguished from "absence of jurisdiction," means that an act, although within general powers of tribunal, is not authorized, because conditions which alone authorize exercise of general power in respect of it are wanting.—Lewis v. Parties. An assignee of a judgment is a proper defendant to a petition for supersedeas of an execution issuing thereon.⁸⁸ Defendant in a judgment, who applies for a supersedeas, is plaintiff in the proceeding subsequently had on his petition for a supersedeas.⁸⁹

Notice. Plaintiff in execution is not entitled to notice of the filing of an application in vacation,⁹⁰ although he is entitled to notice of the hearing in term time.⁹¹

Hearing. In accordance with the rule that that which forms the ground for relief, in a supersedeas proceeding to annul an execution, must rest on facts accruing subsequent to the judgment or decree, discussed supra § 1, the court may inquire into matters operating in equitable satisfaction of the judgment.⁹² Where a petition is filed to set aside and suspend a sheriff's return of forfeiture of a bond and to set aside execution thereon, it has been held not to be error to permit the sheriff to testify that he made no second levies on certain property,⁹³ and to testify as to what he really did in the premises as to levy and attachment.⁹⁴ Where an issue is formed on the facts set forth in a petition for a supersedeas of an execution, it may properly be submitted to a jury for decision,⁹⁵ and should then be tried as other issues of fact submitted in ordinary cases and under the same rules of evidence.⁹⁶ Plaintiff in the supersedeas proceeding is entitled to open and conclude the argument.⁹⁷ Since, as discussed infra § 8, a supersedeas to an interlocutory decree does not operate as an appeal or writ of error so as to bring the cause into the appellate court for review, whether a lower court was in error in granting a supersedeas is not a matter for consideration by a higher court on an application to supersede the lower court's supersedeas.⁹⁸

§ 5. Order, Writ, and Service Thereof

The writ of supersedeas, which is to be distinguished from the order therefor, must follow the substantial requirements of the statute, including statutory requisites as to the time of issuance.

The order for a supersedeas is not a supersedeas of itself;⁹⁹ it is but the declaration of the judge that it is fit under the circumstances that a supersedeas should issue;¹ and it may be recalled by him at any time before it is complied with, if on consideration he deems it improper or improvident.² The supersedeas must follow the substantial requirements of the statute,³ and should conform to the order for its issuance.⁴ The writ is not addressed to a sheriff or other officer to be served on him who holds the process, the action of which is to be suspended,⁵ but is directed to the officer who holds the process,⁶ informing him that the execution or other mandate has been superseded,⁷ and it may be served by anyone.⁸ In giving notice of a supersedeas, it has been held that the sheriff must pursue the mode required by statute for giving notice on replevy bonds.⁹

after a certain period from the time a judgment shall be made final, if a supersedeas is not given within the time limited by the statute, the right to the remedy is lost;¹⁰ and if given thereafter, it is ineffective.¹¹ Under such a statute it has been held that the order awarding the writ was the commencement of the proceedings on the supersedeas,¹² and that, if the order was within the period, although the bond was not given until after the expiration of the period, so that the writ could not issue until after that lapse of time, on the execution of the bond the writ might issue.¹³ However, where both the order awarding the supersedeas and the supersedeas bond were made shortly after the judgment, it has been held that a writ awarded after the lapse of twelve years was improvidently issued,¹⁴ even though there was no clerk of court at the time the order was made, where such vacancy did not continue during the statutory period.¹⁵

§ 6. Waiver of Irregularity in Issuance or Return

Irregularity in the issue and return of a writ of supersedeas is waived by appearance and answer to the application for the writ.

Where, on a hearing in term time, on an application for a writ of supersedeas, a plaintiff in execution appeared and filed an answer and demanded a jury trial, it has been held that, by so doing, he waived any irregularity in the issue and return of the writ.¹⁶

§ 7. Discharging, Quashing, or Vacating Writ

A writ of supersedeas will be quashed where there is a substantial variance between it and the order for its issuance, where it embraces several judgments, or where it was otherwise improperly issued.

A writ of supersedeas will be quashed where there is a substantial variance between the supersedeas and the order for its issuance,¹⁷ or where the supersedeas embraces several judgments even though between the same parties and on claims of a like nature,¹⁸ although it has been held that a writ of supersedeas which embraces two separate executions is not a nullity.¹⁹ So, too, a supersedeas issued improvidently or without warrant of law will be quashed or vacated on motion,²⁰ as will a writ granted on an ex parte application,²¹ or one granted by an inferior court to a judgment of the supreme court.²² A motion to discharge a supersedeas suspending an interlocutory order will not be granted, however, where the proper parties in interest are not properly before the court and the cause is not ready for hearing.²³

Discharge by lapse of time. A writ of supersedeas granted to stay proceedings until the next term of court is discharged at the end of the next term,²⁴ and an order of the court discharging it during that term has been held not erroneous.²⁵

§ 8. Operation and Effect

A supersedeas suspends the efficacy of a judgment, but does not annul the judgment itself. It has no retroactive operation, and what is lawfully done before the writ takes effect is valid and must stand.

A supersedeas suspends the efficacy of a judgment,²⁶ but does not, like a reversal, annul the judgment itself.²⁷ Its object and effect are to stay future proceedings,²⁸ and not to undo what is already done.²⁹ It has no retroactive operation,³⁰ so as to deprive a judgment of its force and authority from the beginning,³¹ but only suspends the judgment after and while it is itself effectual.³² Hence, whatever is lawfully done under the judgment before the supersedeas takes effect is valid and must stand,³³ but anything done afterward is unauthorized by the judgment, and must be set aside.³⁴

The supersedeas prevents the enforcement of a judgment or decree by process of the court,³⁵ and, when ordered and issued to an officer by proper authority, he is bound to obey it;³⁶ and, if he holds property in his custody under an attachment, the supersedeas operates to release the property, and authorizes the officer to return it to the debtor,³⁷ without requiring a bond that it shall be forthcoming at the end of the suit,³⁸ although the writ is sued out in forma pauperis.³⁹

Effect as to interlocutory decrees. A supersedeas to an interlocutory decree, where allowable, does not operate as an appeal or writ of error so as to bring the cause into the appellate court for review,⁴⁰ the cause remains in the court below,⁴¹ and the effect of the writ is merely to suspend the decree until the final hearing.⁴²

Time of taking effect. Since an order for a supersedeas is not a supersedeas of itself, as discussed supra § 5, the order has no effect until the writ issues.⁴³ The supersedeas takes effect not at the moment when it is issued,⁴⁴ but when the proper evidence of its existence has been furnished,⁴⁵ or when the officer who holds the process superseded has actual notice of it.⁴⁶

§ 9. Violation of Writ

Certain actions taken after supersedeas have been held not a violation of the writ, which would be a contempt.

A suit brought by a curator of an estate to secure instructions as to his duties, the object being to preserve the estate pending litigation, has been held not a violation of a supersedeas order in a proceeding involving the estate.⁴⁷ A violation of a supersedeas is a contempt, as discussed in Contempt § 16.

§ 10. Bonds

A bond or undertaking is ordinarily required to be given in order to obtain a supersedeas.

Under some statutes a bond or undertaking is required to be given in order to obtain a supersedeas,⁴⁸ which bond, if the supersedeas is set aside, is given the force and effect of a judgment.⁴⁹ However, where execution issues improvidently, it has been held that the court will issue a supersedeas without recognizance;⁵⁰ and, where a supersedeas was allowed without requiring a bond when one should have been required, and the cause was docketed without objection, it has been held that the supersedeas will not be dismissed on motion made after the lapse of several years from the time of awarding it.⁵¹ A statute granting the right to proceed on a pauper's oath has been held to apply to writs of supersedeas in lieu of an appeal, so that on a proper showing a supersedeas may be had on the pauper's oath without a bond.⁵²

The supersedeas bond will not, of itself, operate to supersede a judgment;⁵³ and it will be presumed that the court approved the bond and security before ordering a supersedeas to issue.⁵⁴ Although the condition of a bond does not conform to the statute, if the bond was effectual to delay the collection of the execution, it has been held that the bond becomes absolute on the discharge of the supersedeas,⁵⁵ and may be prosecuted as an obligation at common law;⁵⁶ and, where the parties stay execution by illegal proceedings, neither the principal nor the surety will be allowed to avoid responsibility by reason of their illegal act.⁵⁷

Actions on bonds. Rules governing actions on bonds and the amount of recovery therein generally, discussed in Bonds §§ 99-133, have been applied in actions on supersedeas bonds.⁵⁸ It has been held that a petition on a bond must allege that a supersedeas was issued⁵⁹ by the proper officer,⁶⁰ although it has also been held that it is no ground for demurrer to a declaration on such a bond that it does not aver the issuance⁶¹ and return⁶² of the supersedeas, and that any defects in the bond are matters of defense on issue.⁶³ It has further been held unnecessary to set forth the judgment and execution in consequence of which the writ was sued out where the bond narrates the judgment.⁶⁴ A petition is demurrable where it does not allege that the judgment has not been paid;⁶⁵ but an averment that the writ was discharged and that defendant in execution has not paid the judgment, interest, and damages whereby the bond became forfeited has been held to be a sufficient averment of damages.⁶⁶ Money judgments may sometimes be authorized on supersedeas bonds.⁶⁷

SUPERSESSSION. Act or an instance of superseding, or state of being superseded; supersedure; removal and replacement.¹ It has been distinguished from "assistance" see 7 C.J.S. p 1 note 6.

SUPERSTITIOUS. Of, pertaining to, proceeding from, characterized by, or manifesting, superstition; addicted to, or swayed by, superstition.² It is stated in Charities § 18 that no religious observances can be deemed as a matter of law, superstitious, and thus gifts are not prohibited as superstitious if they are for the observance of any ceremonial, the efficacy of which is recognized by the church of which the donor is a member.

SUPERSTRUCTURE. In railroad terminology, the roadbed with whatever has been constructed upon it, as stated in Railroads § 1 j.

SUPERVENE. To come or happen as something additional, unlooked for, or extraneous; to occur with reference or relation to something else; to be added to or follow closely.³

SUPERVISE. To oversee;⁴ to oversee for direction;⁵ to oversee, with power of direction;⁶ to have oversight of;⁷ to exercise supervision over;⁸ to superintend;⁹ to direct;¹⁰ to superintend and direct;¹¹ to have charge of, with authority to direct or regulate.¹²

"Supervise" is further defined as meaning to inspect;¹³ and, more specifically, to inspect with authority;¹⁴ to inspect and direct the work of others.¹⁵

It has been said that the word "supervise" definitely relates to the acts of others, and not to the acts of the person supervising,¹⁶ and does not mean doing the work in detail, but rather, to see that the work is done,¹⁷ and the term connotes not only knowledge, but also executive capacity.¹⁸

As employed with reference to a profession, the word "supervise" is said to be big enough to fit the ordinary orbit of professional administration,¹⁹ and would include making rules pertaining to professional conduct.²⁰

"Supervise" has been held synonymous with "control" see 18 C.J.S. p 33 note 64, and "superintend" see ante p 887 note 68.

Supervising. The word "supervising" is elastic in its nature,²¹ and when it is used with reference to a business its meaning depends in a measure on the character of the business in question²² and also on the general manner in which it is regulated.²³ The term fairly excludes the idea of general or constant manual labor,²⁴ but it does not mean "not working."²⁵ On the contrary, it signifies work rather than idleness, and is naturally understood to mean taking part in the work,²⁶ and thus it is unreasonable to assume that a person engaged in "supervising" should at all times refrain from any active or demonstrative regulation.²⁷

"Supervised" is the past participle of "super-vise."²⁸

SUPERVISION. The word "supervision" is not of precise import and when not limited by the context is broad enough to cover more than one subject.²⁹ It implies oversight and direction,³⁰ and does not necessarily exclude the doing of all manual labor, but may properly include the taking of an active part in the work.³¹

"Supervision" is defined as meaning the act of overseeing³² or supervising;³³ having general oversight of, especially as an officer vested with authority;³⁴ inspection;³⁵ oversight;³⁶ superintendence.³⁷

Not one well-known meaning

It cannot be said that there is one well-known meaning of the word which must be adopted on all occasions, but the meaning must be governed by the circumstances and the context in which it is used.—Attorney General v. Southport Corporation, [1923] 1 Ch. 548, 556—60 C.J. p 1169 note 33.

As a noun, the word "supply" is generally⁷⁶ and chiefly⁷⁷ used in the plural, while the noun "supplies" is usually defined in the singular,⁷⁸ and the same definitions are commonly given for both the singular and plural forms.⁷⁹

In their more general signification, the words "supply" and "supplies," as applied to material objects, embrace anything required or furnished to meet a need,⁸⁰ and relate to those articles necessary for enabling an existing entity to function properly,⁸¹ and in this sense are defined as meaning that which is⁸² or can be⁸³ supplied; that which supplies a want;⁸⁴ anything yielded or afforded to meet a want;⁸⁵ available aggregate of things needed or demanded⁸⁶ in amount sufficient for a given use or purpose;⁸⁷ sufficiency of things for use or want;⁸⁸ sufficiency for use or need;⁸⁹ an amount sufficient for a given use or purpose;⁹⁰ and also as the act of furnishing with what is wanted.⁹¹

The terms are further defined as meaning a quantity of something supplied or on hand;⁹² a quantity of something furnished or on hand;⁹³ necessities collected and held for distribution and use;⁹⁴ means of provision or relief;⁹⁵ stores;⁹⁶ a stock.⁹⁷

In what is sometimes referred to as their "restricted" sense the words "supply" and "supplies" ordinarily are understood to mean any substance that is consumed with its use,⁹⁸ and where articles are totally used up in the usual and ordinary performance of a contract, so that nothing remains in excess of normal salvage, they lose their identity as tools, appliances, implements, and machinery and are included within the broader definition of "supplies."⁹⁹

The terms "supply" and "supplies" are commonly employed in the restricted sense in connection with building and construction contracts, and when so used are generally held to include things other than labor¹ which are furnished for, and used directly in the carrying on of, the work,² and are entirely consumed thereby,³ but which do not enter into, and become a physical part of, the finished structure.⁴

When used in connection with dealings between a farm landlord and his tenant, "supplies" has a well-defined and definite meaning, and means supplies for the well-being of the tenant's family and to make the crop during the term of tenancy.⁵

A very specific use of the word "supply" is to signify a substitute,⁶ and the plain and usual meaning of the word in this sense is one who supplies a place or serves instead of another,⁷ specifically, a clergyman who occupies a pulpit temporarily.⁸

The ordinary meaning of the words "supply" and

"supplies" in their general and accepted use is such as to include goods, wares, and merchandise of almost every kind and nature, whether used in the household or on the farm, or in any sort of productive or constructive work requiring the labor or service of men or animals or machinery.⁹ Ordinarily the terms include articles such as pencils, paper, rubber bands, blanks, and ink,¹⁰ as well as powder, dynamite fuses, and caps,¹¹ but do not include accounts receivable,¹² cash,¹³ insurance policies,¹⁴ or investments.¹⁵ For other particular applications of the terms see 60 C.J. p 1167 note 51—p 1168 note 90.

The noun "supplies" has been distinguished from "equipment" see 30 C.J.S. p 296 note 23, and "materials" see 57 C.J.S. p 450 note 46.

As a verb, the word "supply" is defined as meaning to furnish;¹⁶ to provide;¹⁷ to furnish or provide;¹⁸ to furnish with what is wanted;¹⁹ to make provision for.²⁰ It is also defined as meaning to serve instead of; to take the place of.²¹

In a restricted sense, the term "supply" means to supply some person other than oneself,²² and its underlying idea is that the thing supplied is something belonging to the supplier and not to the person supplied.²³ "Supplied" has been distinguished from "issued" see 48 C.J.S. p 778 note 16.

The supply of various utilities to consumers is treated in appropriate titles of this work, specific reference being made to Electricity §§ 24-28, Gas §§ 18-27, and Steam §§ 4-10. SUPPORT. The word "support" is derived from the Latin "subportare,"²⁴ and, as is indicated by the definitions as well as the derivation, implies sustaining from beneath,²⁵ and it includes the idea of bearing weight.²⁶

As a noun, "support" is defined generally to mean one who or that which supports; supporting means, agency, medium, proof, etc.; a prop.²⁷

As a verb, "to support" is defined generally as meaning to maintain;²⁸ to provide for;²⁹ to hold in an existing state or condition;³⁰ to uphold;³¹ to sustain;³² to bear by being under.³³

The verb "to support" is further defined as meaning to carry on;³⁴ to enable to continue;³⁵ to keep from failing;³⁶ to supply funds for the means of continuing;³⁷ and it also means to defend;³⁸ to uphold by aid or countenance;³⁹ to vindicate.⁴⁰

"Supported" is the past participle of the verb "to support,"⁴¹ and it has been said that it is defined as meaning to verify or to substantiate.⁴² It has been held to be equivalent to "sustained."⁴³

endum where the appropriations are necessary for the support of the government is treated in Statutes § 121.

Support of persons. As applied to persons the word "support" is a general term,⁴⁴ of broad signification,⁴⁵ and, like most words, it has a variety of meanings.⁴⁶ It is not a word of art, but, rather, a word which has a relative meaning,⁴⁷ and its meaning is necessarily flexible.⁴⁸ It is deemed to be a word of general welfare,⁴⁹ and imports the welfare of the body.⁵⁰

tence;⁵² sustenance;⁵³ the supply of necessities;⁵⁴ a livelihood;⁵⁵ a living;⁵⁶ a source or means of living;⁵⁷ that which furnishes a livelihood to a person or family;⁵⁸ articles for the sustenance of a family;⁵⁹ income sufficient for the support of a family;⁶⁰ income used as a means of living.⁶¹

The word "support" includes food,⁶² clothing,⁶³ and shelter,⁶⁴ and it includes such a supply of food, clothing, and housing as is suitable to the condition in life and is commensurate with ability.⁶⁵ However, in its ordinary signification the word "support" does not merely include board,⁶⁶ and is not limited to food,⁶⁷ clothing,⁶⁸ and shelter⁶⁹ or habitation.⁷⁰

While it includes everything necessary to proper maintenance,⁷¹ it includes something more than the bare necessities of life;⁷² it involves the comforts of life as well,⁷³ and it takes in everything, necessities and luxuries, which a person in a certain situation is entitled to have and enjoy;⁷⁴ and it may include all such means of living as would enable a person to live in a style and condition and with a degree of comfort suitable and becoming to his station in life.⁷⁵ It therefore follows that anything requisite to the housing, feeding, clothing, health, proper recreation, vacation, or traveling expense is proper,⁷⁶ keeping in view the social family relationship and the quantum of the income.⁷⁷ The term may include the building of a home, although not necessarily,⁷⁸ and it has been said that the building of a house, either in whole or in part, cannot be considered a part of the support of the person who is to occupy it.⁷⁹ The duty to support does not, as a general proposition, require that an education be provided,⁸⁰ although a parent's duty to support a child may require that an education be provided, as discussed generally in Parent and Child § 15, and, in connection with divorce statutes and decrees, in Divorce § 319 h. The word "support" has been held to include medical treatment⁸¹ and care;⁸² medical assistance reasonably required for the preservation of health;⁸³ and in some cases to include medicines and medical services as necessities,⁸⁴ but the term is not always given such a broad signification.⁸⁵ It also includes dental care.⁸⁶

during life;⁸⁷ thus funeral expenses are not within the meaning of the word,⁸⁸ and it has been held that the term does not include an allowance for the payment of life insurance premiums.⁸⁹

As a verb, "support," as used with respect to persons, is defined as meaning to furnish with funds or means for maintenance;⁹⁰ to give means of livelihood to.⁹¹

Because of his status a person may be entitled to receive support either from another person or from the federal, state, or municipal government, and this right to support is frequently imposed by statute, although in some instances it exists under the common law, and in some instances the failure of a person to provide the support that is required of him will render him liable to criminal prosecution.

A woman who has the status of a wife is entitled to be supported by her husband, this obligation being imposed both by the common law and by statute, as stated in Husband and Wife § 15. However, a man who has the status of a husband is not, except where statutes so provide, entitled to support from his wife, as stated in Husband and Wife § 16. For other references to the rights, duties, and incidents of support as between spouses see the index to the title Husband and Wife.

An infant or minor child, because of his status as such, is entitled to support from his parents, and, similarly, a parent, because of his status as such, in many jurisdictions, is entitled in a proper case to support from his child or children. The right of a child to support from his parents, and of a parent to support from his children is treated in Parent and Child, and for specific references see the index to that title. Provision by the state for support of infants where the parents lack ability is discussed in Infants §§ 9, 10. The support of spouses and of children is frequently treated in connection with separations and divorce, and for specific references in these connections see the index to the title Divorce.

A person who occupies a particular status such as an apprentice, a convict, an Indian, a pauper, or a ward may be entitled because of such status to be supported, and for the treatment of the right of support of such persons see the indexes to the titles Apprentices, Convicts, Indians, Paupers, and Guardian and Ward. Infant bastards and insane persons may also be entitled to support and for specific references see the index to Bastards and Insane Persons.

A person may enter into a contract to provide support for another person and in this connection see the indexes to the titles Contracts and Deeds.

Comparisons and distinctions. The noun "support" has been held to be synonymous with "maintenance" see 54 C.J.S. p 905 note 42, and "subsistence" see ante p 761 note 31, and has been distinguished from "benefit" see 10 C.J.S. p 339 note 84, and "education" see 28 C.J.S. p 833 note 78.

As a verb, "support" has been held to be synonymous with, or equivalent to, "defend" see 26 C.J.S. p 671 note 20, and "maintain" see 54 C.J.S. p 903 note 82, and practically synonymous with "favor" see 35 C.J.S. p 756 note 34. It has been held not synonymous with "care" see 12 C.J.S. p 1144 note 11, and has been distinguished from "educate" see 28 C.J.S. p 832 note 56.

Phrases employing the word "support" are set out in the note.⁹²

SUPPOSE. To believe;⁹³ to expect;⁹⁴ to receive as true;⁹⁵ also to imagine;⁹⁶ to think.⁹⁷ In common speech, the term is frequently used as an expression of the speaker's enlightened opinion,⁹⁸ although it is more apt for the expression of conjecture.⁹⁹

"Suppose" has been held synonymous with "believe" see 10 C.J.S. p 239 note 96, and "deem" see 26 C.J.S. p 660 note 26. While "assume" and "suppose" are sometimes used interchangeably in the framing of hypothetical questions, "assume" is more commonly used and the two words are not generally synonymous, see 7 C.J.S. p 105 note 27.2.

"Supposed," the past participle of "suppose,"¹ has been held synonymous with "alleged" see 3 C.J.S. p 885 note 76, and "understood."²

SUPPOSITION. A conjecture based on the possibility that a thing could have happened;³ a presumption based on the theory that the thing or occurrence in question could have existed or happened;⁴ an idea or a notion founded on the probability that a thing may have occurred, but without proof that it did occur;⁵ what is not known to be true; not proved.⁶

The term "supposition" has been held synonymous with "belief" see 10 C.J.S. p 237 note 43, and "hypothesis" see 42 C.J.S. p 370 note 1, and has been distinguished from "inference" see 43 C.J.S. p 375 note 49.

The admissibility in evidence of suppositions is discussed generally in Evidence § 450.

SUPPRESS. The plain and ordinary meaning⁷ of the word "suppress" is to crush;⁸ to put down;⁹ to put down or put an end to by force;¹⁰ to overpower;¹¹ to subdue;¹² to quell;¹³ to repress;¹⁴ to stamp out;¹⁵ to destroy.¹⁶

"Suppress" also means to prevent;¹⁷ to prohibit;¹⁸ to put a stop to when actually existing.¹⁹

It never means to license or sanction.²⁰

The term "suppress" has been compared with, or distinguished from, "abate" see 1 C.J.S. p 19 note 10, "regulate" see 76 C.J.S. p 615 note 80, and "restrain" see 77 C.J.S. p 324 note 34. It has been held synonymous with, and has also been distinguished from, "prohibit" see 73 C.J.S. p 6 note 90, p 7 note 94.

SUPPRESSION. The act of suppressing, or the state of being suppressed; a forcible putting or keeping down; repression; restraint.²¹ The term has been held synonymous with "concealment" see 15 C.J.S. p 795 note 23, and "evasion" see 31 C.J.S. p 471 note 85, and it has been distinguished from "regulation" see 76 C.J.S. p 616 note 22.

References to the term "suppression" in connection with evidence in actions generally are made in the title indexes to Criminal Law and Evidence. Matters relating to the suppression of depositions are referred to in the title index to Depositions. The suppression of testimony as constituting contempt is treated in Contempt § 31.

It is stated in Patents § 155 that the nonuse of a patent and suppression of the patented article will not render the patent void or affect the rights of the patentee.

SUPPRESSIO VERI. A suppression of facts which one party is under a legal or equitable obligation to communicate, and with respect to which he cannot be innocently silent, because the other has a right not merely in foro conscientiae, but juris et de jure, to know;²² withholding the truth when it should be uttered.²³ It is a negative act of fraud,²⁴ as distinguished from "suggestio falsi" which is an affirmative fraudulent act, as stated ante p 779 note 97.

word occurring by itself in a book refers the reader to a previous part of the book, like "ante."²⁵

SUPREME. A term derived from "super,"²⁶ and defined as meaning highest in power or authority; holding the highest place, as in government.²⁷

As used in connection with, or with respect to, courts, the word has a well-understood and settled meaning,²⁸ and is the designation usually prescribed by law for the highest court of the state or nation,²⁹ that is, highest in the sense of final or last resort.³⁰

The federal Constitution with its amendments is the supreme law of the land, and the constitution of a state is the supreme law within the realm and sphere of its authority, as stated in Constitutional Law § 3.

SUPT. As an abbreviation for "superintendent," see 1 C.J.S. p 276 note 5.

SUPUESTO. A Spanish term which is said not to be synonymous with "fraudulent."³¹

SURCHARGE. The term "surcharge" is defined generally as meaning a burden greater than the ordinary one, or greater than can well be borne; an excessive burden, load, or charge.³² The word is also employed to signify the penalty exacted against a fiduciary for failure to exercise common prudence, common skill, and common caution in the performance of his duty,³³ and in this sense is treated in the C.J.S. titles Executors and Administrators §§ 472, 863, Receivers §§ 374, 378, 380, and Trusts §§ 400, 417, also 65 C.J. p 921 notes 96-98, p 943 notes 79-84. Surcharging an account stated is discussed in Account Stated § 57.

SURE. While there are many shades of meaning given to the word "sure" in the dictionaries,³⁴ its primary meaning is assured in mind; confident beyond doubt; knowing, believing, trusting, or the like, with certainty; unquestioning;³⁵ and it is therefore a state of mind.³⁶ The term has been held synonymous with "indubitable" see 42 C.J.S. p 1370 note 32.

SURETY. As a legal term, the word "surety" is defined in Principal and Surety § 2 in a broad sense as one who becomes responsible for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another; and, in a narrower sense, as a person who binds himself for the payment of a sum of money, or for the performance of something else, for another who is already bound for such payment or performance.

The word "surety" is employed in a sense, still more general, as meaning security;³⁷ safety; certainty; indubitableness.³⁸

SURETYSHIP. In law, suretyship is a lending of credit to aid a principal who has insufficient credit of his own, and is a direct contract to pay the principal's debt or perform his obligation in case of his default, as stated in Principal and Surety § 1. The distinctions between suretyship and other relations are pointed out in Principal and Surety § 10.

SURFACE. There is no generally accepted definition of the word "surface,"⁴⁰ and even the courts do not agree on a definition of the term,⁴¹ but in each case the meaning must be ascertained from the context in which the term is employed.⁴²

As defined by lexicographers, the word "surface" means the exterior or outside of an object or body; the outermost or uppermost boundary; the face or faces of a three-dimensioned thing; a plane of a solid;⁴³ and in its geometrical sense the term signifies a plane.⁴⁴

As commonly used, however, the word "surface" indicates some degree of thickness,⁴⁵ and as employed with reference to the earth it prima facie means nothing more than the vestimenta terræ,⁴⁶ that is, the top of the earth and whatever is upon the face thereof,⁴⁷ or the superficial part of the land.⁴⁸

"Surface" is said to be the antithesis of "framework" see 37 C.J.S. p 140 note 9.

In mining terminology the word "surface" means that part of the earth or geologic section lying over the minerals, as stated in Mines and Minerals § 3 g.

lexicons⁵⁴ and various decisions⁵⁵ is that which remains when use or need is satisfied;⁵⁶ the excess;⁵⁷ the overplus.⁵⁸

The word "surplus" is further defined as meaning the remainder of a thing;⁵⁹ the residue;⁶⁰ what is left after all proper and legitimate deductions are made;⁶¹ that which remains⁶² or is left⁶³ when use is satisfied, or the excess beyond what is prescribed⁶⁴ or wanted⁶⁵ in law; and, more specifically, the net assets over and above the liabilities;⁶⁶ the amount of the residue of the assets after the liabilities have been deducted.⁶⁷

Frequently the word "surplus" is used with reference to a fund, and as so used is generally understood to mean either a fund which is no longer needed⁶⁸ or that which is left from a fund which has been appropriated for a particular purpose.⁶⁹ In a generally accepted commercial sense it usually applies to funds remaining on hand after fixed charges or liabilities have been deducted,⁷⁰ and funds not necessary to be kept on hand in cash for immediate use or ordinary demands may be called "surplus."⁷¹

The word "surplus" is commonly employed in corporate financing⁷² and in corporate accounting,⁷³ and as so used has acquired a fixed meaning.⁷⁴ The term may be employed to designate an account on the corporate books,⁷⁵ representing the net assets of the corporation in excess of all liabilities, including capital stock;⁷⁶ or it may be employed to denote an excess in the aggregate value of all the assets of a corporation over the sum of all its liabilities, including capital stock;⁷⁷ the value of all the corporation's assets after its liabilities, including its capital stock, have been deducted.⁷⁸ As distinguished from the capital stock of a corporation, surplus is the excess of net assets over the face value of the shares.⁷⁹ A surplus is not a concrete, primary fact, but is a conclusion of fact, to be ascertained by the comparison of a corporation's assets with the amount of its capital stock,⁸⁰ and it is a prerequisite to the existence of a surplus that the net assets of the corporation exceed the capital stock.⁸¹

A surplus may be "paid-in," as where the stock is issued at a price above par,⁸² or "earned," as where it is derived from undistributed profits,⁸³ and it may, among other things, represent the increase in valuation of land or other assets made on a revaluation of the company's fixed property,⁸⁴ that is, increases resulting from a revaluation of fixed assets.⁸⁵

As applied to financial structures the word "surplus" has a reasonably definite and recognized meaning,⁸⁶ and has a technical and well-defined meaning in the business or profession of banking,⁸⁷ and in banking terminology is descriptive of net earnings, income, and money from whatever source derived,⁸⁸ and in its ordinary sense it indicates the amount left over after setting aside sufficient of the assets of a banker to meet his obligations;⁸⁹ the excess in the aggregate value of all the assets of the bank over the sum of its liabilities, including capital stock.⁹⁰

The courts have given what they have characterized as a simple and elementary explanation of the way in which a surplus is created by a financial institution such as a bank or loan company,⁹¹ and have said that such an institution does not distribute all the profits among the stockholders, but retains some of them, and the fund so created is designated a "surplus."⁹² A surplus may also be created at the time a corporation or financial institution is formed,⁹³ and it is quite usual when organization takes place for the stockholders to contribute, in addition to the share capital or nominal capital stock, a fund which is known as surplus.⁹⁴ It is also quite usual for the directors or managers of such institutions to set apart and add to this fund from time to time some part of the accumulated profits of the business in excess of dividend requirements.⁹⁵ The fund produced in these ways is what is known as "surplus,"⁹⁶ and thus, when employed technically in the nomenclature of banks and bankers, the term "surplus" means the fund which has been permanently set apart as such, having been either paid in originally by the stockholders for that purpose or transferred from the undivided profits account.⁹⁷

Surplus is the property of the bank,⁹⁸ and is not capital stock,⁹⁹ but, like capital stock, it constitutes the working capital of the bank.¹

The primary purpose of a bank surplus is the accumulation of a sum against which bad debts may be charged so that at all times the capital may be kept unimpaired,² and is created for the purpose of meeting unforeseen contingencies and unusual losses,³ and ordinarily a surplus may be used to absorb

To avoid receivership and loss of corporate life

"The propriety of accumulating some surplus is too palpable to require extended discussion. When the capital stock of a bank is impaired, the deficiency must be made good by an assessment on the stockholders; and, in case the deficiency is not made good within 60 days, proceedings may be instituted against it, as in the case of insolvent corporations. Hence, if such a corporation should divide all its profits and accumulate no surplus, any business loss would subject it to the hazard of a receivership and the loss of its corporate life."

at least extraordinary losses.⁴ A surplus which is used to absorb extraordinary losses serves probably the most important purpose for which it was created,⁵ and absolutely to forbid its use for such purpose tends to destroy in large part its typical usefulness, to impair the solvency of the corporation, or at least its status as a going concern, during periods of abnormal losses, and to impede the normal conduct of its business.⁶

It is generally recognized that banks and other financial institutions have a right to create a surplus,⁷ and it has been said that some of the banks which stand the highest in the commercial world have accumulated so much of their profits that their surplus is from ten to thirty times the amount of their capital stock, and their conduct in creating such a surplus is not regarded as illegal.⁸

The words "surplus" and "undivided profits" are sometimes used to indicate the same concept,⁹ and are expressions describing the amount of the residue of the assets after the liabilities have been deducted,¹⁰ although they relate to no particular kind of property.¹¹ While undivided profits may be surplus in the sense that both are constituents of capital,¹² and undivided profits are sometimes to be considered a part of surplus until the declaration of a dividend,¹³ undivided profits are not surplus in the commonly accepted sense,¹⁴ and do not come within the correct definition of the term "surplus,"¹⁵ and in the nomenclature of bankers "surplus" does not include undivided profits.¹⁶ There is, in fact, a sharp distinction between undivided profits and surplus,¹⁷ surplus being such part of the excess in the value of the corporate assets as is treated by the corporation as part of its permanent capital, usually carried on the books in a separate "surplus account," while the term "undivided profits" designates such part of the excess as consists of profits which have neither been distributed as dividends nor carried to the surplus account,¹⁸ and thus, in a technical sense, no profits become undivided profits or surplus until they have been set aside at the end of an accounting period and allocated to certain funds known to accountants and bookkeepers as "undivided profits and surplus."¹⁹

As used with reference to estates the word "surplus" means the residue after the debts and legacies are paid;²⁰ what remains of the estate after payment of funeral expenses, charges of administration, and debts.²¹

"Surplus" has been held to be equivalent to, or synonymous with, "net earnings" see 28 C.J.S. p 612 note 97, "net profits" see 66 C.J.S. p 9 note 60, and "residue" see 77 C.J.S. p 311 note 63. It has been compared with, or distinguished from, "capital" see 12 C.J.S. p 1124 note 1.

The word "surplus" is employed in various connections throughout this work, particular reference being made to the indexes to the titles Banks and Banking, Corporations, Insurance, and Internal Revenue. The term is defined in connection with trust funds generally in the C.J.S. title Trusts § 352. For other particular applications and specific uses of the term consult the Descriptive-Word Index.

Surplus water or waters. The usual flow of a stream over and above prescriptive and appurtenant rights to the flow;²² water which remains in any stream or body of water after all those who are first entitled to the use of its waters have been fully supplied, and there is still some water remaining unclaimed and unappropriated.²³ As used by water-right lawyers, the term means simply water which is flowing in the stream in addition to what may be termed "adjudicated water."²⁴

"Surplus water" also may mean water running off from ground which has been irrigated;²⁵ water not consumed by the process of irrigation;²⁶ waste water.²⁷

The right of the state or of a canal company to dispose of surplus water is treated in Canals § 34. Secondary and successive appropriations of surplus water are discussed in the C.J.S. title Waters § 185, also 67 C.J. p 1014 note 85—p 1015 note 96.

SURPLUSAGE. It has been said that surplusage is where there is something in excess,²⁹ and in law it means matter in any instrument foreign to the purpose;³⁰ matter in any instrument which is not necessary to its meaning but does not affect its validity;³¹ whatever is extraneous, impertinent, superfluous, or unnecessary.³² In procedure "surplusage" means matter which is not necessary or relevant to the case, and which may be rejected.³³

The word "surplusage" has been held to be synonymous with "rest" see 77 C.J.S. p 321 note 80, and has been compared with, or distinguished from, "residue" see 77 C.J.S. p 311 note 64.

"Surplusage" is defined, with reference to pleading in criminal cases, in Indictments and Informations § 155, and with reference to pleading in civil actions in Pleading § 36. See also the indexes to the titles Criminal Law and Judgments, and for other specific references consult the Descriptive-Word Index.

SURPRISE. The term "surprise" is defined generally as meaning the act of taking unawares; sudden confusion or perplexity.³⁴

In private transactions "surprise" is an undue advantage taken of a party under circumstances which mislead, confuse, or disturb the just results of his judgment, and thus expose him to be the victim of the artful, the importunate, and the cunning.³⁵

In a legal sense, the word "surprise" is used to denote some condition or situation in which a party to a cause is unexpectedly placed to his injury, without any default or negligence of his own, which ordinary prudence could not have guarded against;³⁶

an unforeseen disappointment in some reasonable expectation, against which ordinary prudence would not have afforded protection;³⁷ not merely inevitable casualty, or the act of Providence, or what is termed "vis major," or irresistible force, but such unforeseen events, misfortunes, losses, acts, or omissions as are not the result of any negligence or misconduct in the party.³⁸

"Surprise" has been held to be interchangeable with "accident" and practically synonymous therewith, see 1 C.J.S. p 432 notes 55.3, 55.4. It has been distinguished from "excusable neglect" see 33 C.J.S. p 116 note 67.

A party to a civil proceeding who, because of surprise, has been prejudiced in his rights may be entitled to certain forms of relief. Thus surprise which has caused prejudice may be a sufficient reason for a continuance of a civil action, as stated in Continuances §§ 65-70. Surprise may be such that it will permit the opening, vacating, or setting aside of a judgment or decree, as stated in Judgments §§ 280 c, 286 b, and Equity § 631 c. Ordinarily a judgment entered by consent will not be set aside because of surprise, as stated in Judgments § 330 b. In civil proceedings surprise may be sufficient ground for granting a motion for a new trial, and this subject is discussed in New Trial §§ 78-100.

A person accused of crime, like a party to a civil proceeding, may be entitled to relief from surprise which works to his prejudice and prevents a fair trial. Thus an accused who is surprised by some unexpected occurrence or by the introduction of unexpected testimony which, by reasonable diligence, he could not have anticipated, may be entitled to a continuance or postponement, as stated in Criminal Law § 498. Similarly, where, notwithstanding the exercise of due diligence, an accused is prevented through surprise from having a fair trial, a new trial will be granted him, as stated in Criminal Law § 1431. As a general rule surprise is not regarded as sufficient ground for the writ of error coram nobis, or the statutory equivalent thereof, as discussed in Criminal Law § 1606 b (4).

Surprise as ground for setting aside sales of property under judicial process is treated in Executions §§ 230, 234, Judicial Sales §§ 57, 59 b, and Mortgages § 750 d, e (2).

It is stated in the C.J.S. title Witnesses § 477, also 70 C.J. p 793 note 41-p 795 note 44, that the general rule that a party cannot impeach a witness whom he has introduced in a civil or in a criminal case is subject to exception in cases of entrapment, hostility, or surprise. Where the testimony of a witness constitutes surprise or entrapment of the party calling the witness, the party so deceived ordinarily may be permitted to discredit or impeach the witness by showing prior contradictory or inconsistent statements, as discussed in Witnesses § 578, also 70 C.J. p 1028 note 27-p 1045 note 98.

exclude compelled action, but, to the contrary, generally implies such action,⁴⁵ it may also denote voluntary action,⁴⁶ and where it is unqualified and generic it has been held to embrace both meanings.⁴⁷

As a noun, the term "surrender" is defined as meaning the relinquishment of a thing or a property right thereto to another.⁴⁸ It has been compared with, or distinguished from, "abandonment" see Abandonment § 2 b (2), "assignment" see Assignment § 2 b (13), "cancellation" see 12 C.J.S. p 938 note 59, and "merger" see 57 C.J.S. p 1068 note 59.

As a verb, the word "surrender" is defined as meaning to yield;⁴⁹ to yield to the power⁵⁰ or possession⁵¹ of another; to resign;⁵² to yield or resign in favor of another;⁵³ to cease to hold or claim.⁵⁴ It is also defined as meaning to give back;⁵⁵ to relinquish;⁵⁶ to give up;⁵⁷ to relinquish or give up;⁵⁸ to give or deliver up possession of (anything) upon compulsion or demand;⁵⁹ to render or deliver up;⁶⁰ to restore.⁶¹ It has been said that "surrender" does not mean in any sense to vacate or locate.⁶²

"forfeit" see 37 C.J.S. p 2 note 74, and has been distinguished from "delegate" see 26 C.J.S. p 688 note 36.2, "produce" see 72 C.J.S. p 1209 note 25, and "retain" see 77 C.J.S. p 328 note 18.

"Surrendered" is the past participle of the verb "surrender,"⁶³ and it has been said that the word carries with it something more than a bare delivery and indicates a transfer of title as well as of possession.⁶⁴ It has been distinguished from "canceled" see 12 C.J.S. p 937 note 33.

The term "surrender" as employed in connection with policies of insurance is treated in Insurance §§ 454-460. For other particular applications and specific uses of the word consult the Descriptive-Word Index.

estate to the person who has it in reversion or remainder, so as to merge it in the larger estate.⁶⁸

This technical meaning of the word has been somewhat obscured by its frequent use in a nontechnical sense,⁶⁹ the term being employed in its nontechnical sense in connection with the landlord-tenant relationship and treated in this sense in Landlord and Tenant §§ 120-129. For other references to the treatment of the term "surrender" with reference to the landlord-tenant relationship consult the title index to Landlord and Tenant.

The word "surrender" is defined in its technical sense in Deeds § 6 as the yielding up of an estate for life or years to the reversioner or remainderman, and in Estates § 65 a (4) as a yielding up of the life estate to the person having the next immediate estate in reversion or remainder, the lesser estate thereby becoming merged in the greater by mutual agreement.

SURREPTIO. A term in the civil law, defined by the civilians thus: Surreptio est cum per falsam rei narrationem aliquod extorquetur.⁷⁰

SURREPTITIOUS. Falsely crept in; obtained by falsehood, fraud or stealth, by suppression or concealment of facts, fraudulently obtained.⁷¹

SURREPTITIOUSLY. In a surreptitious manner; by stealth; in an underhand way.⁷² It has been distinguished from "unjustly."⁷³

SURROGATE. In some states "surrogate" is the name given to the judge or judicial officer who has the administration of probate matters, guardianships, etc., as stated in Judges § 2 f. The surrogate's court as a judicial tribunal is treated in Courts § 11. For other references see the index to the title Courts. Surrogate's courts are treated in other titles of this work under the general heading "Probate" or "Probate courts."

SURVEILLANCE. Oversight, superintendence, supervision.⁷⁷ The term is employed in connection with the offense of escape and is treated in Escape §§ 4, 20.

SURVEY. The word "survey" has several significations,⁷⁸ and in a very general sense it means an attentive or particular view.⁷⁹

As applied to a vessel, a "survey" is a statement of the present condition of the vessel,⁸⁰ and in marine insurance the term has this meaning as stated in Insurance § 49, and as used in this sense see Insurance §§ 948, 951, 1084; and see Shipping § 8.

In fire insurance terminology the word "survey" may signify an application for such insurance, or it may denote a description of the property contained in such application as stated in Insurance § 232 b. See also Insurance § 301.

80. U.S.—Chicago S. S. Lines v. U. S. Lloyds, C.C.A.III., 12 F.2d 733, 737.

The word "survey" is frequently used with reference to land, and in this connection it may signify an examination of land with a design to ascertain the condition, quantity, or value;⁸¹ but the term is more commonly employed to indicate the measurement of land,⁸² and when so used it means the actual measurement of land, ascertaining the contents by running lines and angles, marking the same, and fixing corners and boundaries.⁸³ "Survey" may be used in this sense to indicate a chart or plat;⁸⁴ a measured plan or draft containing a written statement of the courses, distances, and quantity of land;⁸⁵ a measured plan and description of any portion of country, or of a road or line through it;⁸⁶ and it may apply to a map, plat, or chart exhibiting the result of an actual examination of the surface of the ground as well as to the examination itself.⁸⁷

However, the word "survey" does not necessarily mean a plat of land made by a surveyor as such,⁸⁸ and neither does it necessarily mean a paper containing a statement of the courses, distances, and quantity of land.⁸⁹ In this connection the word "survey" is treated in Boundaries, reference being made to the index to that title, and the term is also treated in Highways §§ 68, 70 b, 91, 94 d, and Public Lands §§ 28-35. For other particular applications and specific uses of the term consult the Descriptive-Word Index.

As a verb, the term "survey" is defined as meaning to inspect or take a view of; to view with attention; to view with a scrutinizing eye;⁹⁰ to examine;⁹¹ to examine and ascertain the state of;⁹² to examine with reference to condition, situation, and value;⁹³ also, to determine the boundaries, extent, position, etc.;⁹⁴ to ascertain the corners, boundaries, and divisions, with distances and directions, but not necessarily to compute areas included within defined boundaries;⁹⁵ to measure, as land.⁹⁶

Surveying. While the word "surveying" in a very general sense means the act or occupation of making surveys,⁹⁸ the term is more specifically employed to denote that branch of applied mathematics which teaches the art of determining the area of any portion of the earth's surface, the lengths and directions of the boundary lines, the contour of the surface, etc.,⁹⁹ and in this sense is defined as meaning the operation of finding and delineating the contour, dimensions, position, topography, etc., as of any part of the earth's surface, whether land or water,¹ by the preparation of a measured plan or description of any area or other portion of the country, or of a road or line through it.² It has been said that carrying a chain or holding a pole or a rod, while necessary to surveying, is not surveying.³

SURVEYOR. The term "surveyor" is defined generally as meaning one who examines a thing for the purpose of ascertaining its condition, quality, or character; an inspector;⁴ it is treated in this sense in Customs Duties § 83 and Insurance § 951 c (2).

The word "surveyor" is used in a more specific sense to denote one who ascertains the area of any portion of the earth's surface, the lengths and directions of the boundary lines, the contour of the surface, etc., or performs the duties necessary to their ascertainment,⁵ and in this sense is discussed in Boundaries §§ 107, 116 c, 121, Highways §§ 55-63, Private Roads § 8, and Public Lands §§ 29, 173, 304.

Surveyor's transit. A term applied in engineering to a portable instrument of the theodolite kind, designed for measuring both horizontal and vertical angles. It is provided with horizontal and vertical circles, one or two levels, and a compass, and is mounted on a tripod-stand.⁶

SURVIVABILITY. The noun form of the adjective "survivable."⁷ The term is employed in the general rule stated in Abatement and Revival § 132 that "assignability and survivability of causes of action are convertible terms."

SURVIVAL. The act of surviving; a living beyond the term of existence of another person or thing or the happening of a specified event.⁸

The survival of actions following the death of a party is treated generally in Abatement and Revival §§ 114-186. The general rule that causes of action for divorce do not survive the death of either party is discussed in Divorce § 100.

The right to recover damages for death caused by wrongful act is wholly statutory, and statutes which confer this right fall into two groups: The first consists of statutes patterned upon Lord Campbell's Act, creating a new cause of action in the designated person or persons. The second consists of statutes which provide for the survival of the cause of action which deceased would have had, had he not died; and statutes which are of this second group are sometimes called "survival statutes," and are treated in Death § 16.

SURVIVE. The word "survive" is a verb,⁹ and it may be used either transitively or intransitively.¹⁰

In its transitive form¹¹ "to survive" means to live beyond the life or existence of;¹² to outlive, that is, to be alive at the time of a particular event or the death of a particular person, which event or person the other is to survive;¹³ and this is said to be the primary meaning of the word.¹⁴ "Survive," in its transitive sense, is further defined as meaning to live longer than¹⁵ some other individual;¹⁶ to exist in force or operation beyond any period specified;¹⁷ to remain in life after the death of another, or after a particular date or the happening of a particular event;¹⁸ to continue to live beyond a specified period, event, or condition;¹⁹ to continue to live or exist beyond the life or existence of;²⁰ to outlive;²¹ to outlast;²² to outlast the end of;²³ as, to survive a person, a disaster, or one's period of usefulness.²⁴

In its intransitive sense,²⁵ the verb "survive" means to remain alive,²⁶ and this is said to be the common and usual meaning of the word when used in this sense.²⁷

The verb "survive" is further defined as meaning to live after;²⁸ to live beyond;²⁹ to live longer;³⁰ to live on after passing through;³¹ to live through in spite of.³²

As commonly used in its strict sense, the word "survive" applies to persons,³³ but in legal phraseology it is frequently employed with reference to the continued existence of corporations or institutions;³⁴ and in its popular signification it may mean overliving a specified individual, living beyond a specified event, or it may mean still living, or living at some designated period of time.³⁵

Surviving. The word "surviving" may be used as the present participle of the verb "survive"³⁶ or it may be used as a descriptive adjective.³⁷ It means existing;³⁸ existent;³⁹ remaining alive;⁴⁰ and it also means outliving another.⁴¹

SURVIVOR. It has been said that "survivor" is a relative term,⁴² and that it is dependent on the context for its meaning,⁴³ but the term should receive its normal meaning having reference to the context of the instrument wherein it is used.⁴⁴

The word "survivor" is defined as meaning one who outlives another;⁴⁵ one of two or more persons who lives after the other or others have deceased;⁴⁶ and this is said to be the ordinary as well as the legal signification of the term.⁴⁷ "Survivor" is further defined as meaning one who survives another;⁴⁸ one who outlives another person or lives beyond some happening event;⁴⁹ one who survives or outlives another person, a time, an event, or thing;⁵⁰ one who continues to live after the death of those who comprised his group;⁵¹ the longest liver of two or more persons.⁵²

In a legal sense a "survivor" is the longest liver of two joint tenants, or any two persons joined in the right of a thing;⁵³ he that remains alive after the other be dead.⁵⁴

The common meaning of "survivor" implies two lives running together,⁵⁵ and the term presupposes the contemporaneous existence of one who continues to live and another who ceases to live, since one cannot outlive another unless he was in being during the life of the one whom he is said to outlive.⁵⁶ Thus the use of the word by way of designation is to indicate a person who has lived after the death of another⁵⁷ or a person who at a given time is still in life.⁵⁸

Survivors. Broadly speaking, the word "survivors" includes all persons who may outlive another;⁵⁹ and, in common parlance, it is universally applied only to members of a class of persons.⁶⁰ It has been said that the term "survivors" is in itself a trap and should never be used without careful consideration for it may be and frequently is construed as meaning "others."⁶¹

The rule restricting the competency of parties and interested persons to be witnesses in actions by or against representatives, survivors, or successors in title or interest of persons deceased or incompetent is treated in the C.J.S. title Witnesses §§ 132-251, also 70 C.J. p 206 note 26-p 376 note 37.

SURVIVORSHIP. Where a person becomes entitled to property by reason of his having survived another person who had an interest in it.⁶² It has been said that the most familiar example of survivorship is in the case of joint tenants, the rule being that on the death of one of two joint tenants the whole property passes to the survivor.⁶³ This rule is treated, with respect to estates in joint tenancy, in Joint Tenancy § 1 b. See also the C.J.S. title Trusts §§ 236-238, also 65 C.J. p 635 note 1-p 639 note 58.

Presumption and evidence as to survivorship as between persons who perish in a common disaster is discussed in Death §§ 11, 12.

Words of survivorship are frequently employed in testamentary dispositions of property, and the construction which will be placed on such words when used to designate beneficiaries and their shares is discussed in the C.J.S. title Wills § 695, also 69 C.J. p 270 note 7-p 272 note 24.

SUSCEPTIBLE. Capable of being influenced; easily brought under a specified power or influence; yielding or succumbing readily; usually with "of" or "to."⁶⁴ It has been held synonymous with "capable" see 12 C.J.S. p 1115 note 24, and has been distinguished from "possible" see 72 C.J.S. p 245 note 22.

SUSPECT. The term "suspect," which is not technical,⁶⁵ is defined as meaning to imagine to exist; have some, although insufficient, grounds for inferring; also to have a vague notion of the existence of, without adequate proof; mistrust; surmination;⁸⁸ to hold in an undetermined or undecided stage, awaiting fuller information;⁸⁹ to hold undetermined;⁹⁰ and it may mean to withhold for a time on certain conditions.⁹¹

The connection in which the word "suspend" is used may give it a stronger meaning than that which is not permanent,⁹² and thus it may imply a termination,⁹³ and it may mean to discontinue⁹⁴ or dispense with.⁹⁵

In connection with employment, "suspend" may refer to a permanent discharge from employment,⁹⁶ or it may mean to remove, either temporarily or permanently, from employment.⁹⁷

"Suspend" has been held synonymous with "dismiss" see 27 C.J.S. p 151 note 81, and "dispense" see 27 C.J.S. p 344 note 33, and has been distinguished from "postpone" see 72 C.J.S. p 394 notes 9, 10, and "vacate."⁹⁸

References applicable to the term "suspend" have been made to various titles throughout this work in the definition "suspension" post.

"Suspending" is the present participle of "suspend."⁹⁹

"Suspended." The word "suspended" has been defined and interpreted both judicially and as a matter of common usage, and there is no ambiguity or uncertainty in its meaning,¹ and in its common and general usage² it means temporarily inactive³ or inoperative;⁴ held in abeyance;⁵ temporarily debarred;⁶ arrested; interrupted; stopped for a time.⁷

It has been distinguished from "forfeited" see 37 C.J.S. p 3 note 79, "revoked" see 77 C.J.S. p 363 note 47, "superseded" see ante p 889 note 18, and "terminated."⁸

use, not in esse for a time, they are said to be in suspense, tunc dormiunt; but they may be revived or awakened.¹⁰

SUSPENSION. The word "suspension" is ordinarily¹¹ defined as meaning a temporary stop;¹² a temporary stop of a right;¹³ a temporary delay, interruption, or cessation;¹⁴ the ceasing or causing something to cease from operation temporarily;¹⁵ intermission; stay.¹⁶

It is also employed to indicate the temporary cutting off or debarring of one from the privileges of an institution¹⁷ or the temporary forced withdrawal from the exercise of office, powers, prerogatives, or privileges as a member.¹⁸

As applied to commercial institutions,¹⁹ such as banks,²⁰ the term "suspension" conveys the meaning of insolvency²¹ or business failure,²² and signifies stoppage of payment or failure to meet obligations and engagements.²³ In this sense the term is well understood by business men as meaning a failure to pay from an inability to do so.²⁴

Suspension of a right in an estate is a partial extinguishment, or an extinguishment for a time;²⁵ a partial extinguishment for a time, as contrasted with a complete extinguishment, where the right is absolutely dead.²⁶

The term "suspension" has been held equivalent to, or synonymous with, "dismissal" see 27 C.J.S. p 151 note 97, and "extinguishment" see 35 C.J.S. p 294 note 41.

It has been compared with, or distinguished from "discharge" see 26 C.J.S. p 1330 note 42, "dismissal" see 27 C.J.S. p 151 note 98, "expulsion" see 35 C.J.S. p 286 note 83, "extinguishment" see 35 C.J.S. p 294 note 42, and "revocation" see 77 C.J.S. p 362 note 29.

Suspension from membership in an organization such as an association or society is treated in various titles throughout this work, particular reference being made to Associations § 25, Clubs § 17, Exchanges § 7, Physicians and Surgeons § 80, and Religious Societies § 14. Suspension of pupils from schools is treated with reference to private schools in Schools and School Districts § 11, and with reference to public schools in §§ 503-505. See also § 453. Suspension of teachers is treated in § 203, and of a school from a school district in § 83.

The phrase "suspension from office" is defined in Officers § 58, and that section deals with the suspension of public or governmental officers generally. The suspension of governmental officers, as well as governmental employees and agents, is a subject which is treated in a number of other titles through-

The term "suspicion" has been compared with, or distinguished from, "belief" see 10 C.J.S. p 238 note 51, and "knowledge" see 51 C.J.S. p 467 note 8.

The authority of peace officers and private persons to arrest on mere suspicion without a warrant is treated in Arrest § 6 b, c, § 8 b, c; sufficiency of a search warrant issued on suspicion is considered in Searches and Seizures § 74. The actionable quality of words calculated to induce suspicion of the commission of a crime is discussed in Libel and Slander § 12. It is stated in Fraudulent Conveyances §§ 7 b, 128, that suspicion of fraud is not sufficient to impart notice of it, and that mere suspicion is insufficient to charge the buyer with the fraud of the seller.

SUSPICIOUS. Open or liable to suspicion; such as to arouse suspicion or mistrust; questionable; as, suspicious circumstances.⁴²

Sus. person. As an abbreviated term for "suspicious person" see 1 C.J.S. p 276 note 5.

SUSTAIN. The word "sustain" is susceptible of several constructions.⁴³ It is defined as meaning to carry on or to maintain,⁴⁴ and this is said to be the general meaning of the term.⁴⁵ It is also defined as meaning to prove; to establish by evidence.⁴⁶

It has been held synonymous with "conserve" see 15 C.J.S. p 984 note 18.1, and "warrant,"⁴⁷ and has been distinguished from "accrue" see 1 C.J.S. p 760 note 66, and "carry" see 13 C.J.S. p 1764 note 18.

"Sustaining" is the present participle of "sustain."⁴⁸

"Sustained" is the past participle of "sustain"⁴⁹ and has been distinguished from "maintained" see 54 C.J.S. p 903 note 96.

SUSTENANCE. That which supports life; food; victuals; provisions.⁵⁰ It has been held to mean that necessary food and drink which is sufficient to support life and maintain health,⁵¹ and to include shelter.⁵² The term has been distinguished from "medicine" see 57 C.J.S. p 1043 note 45.

SUSTRAJO. A Spanish word which has been used as the equivalent of "stole."⁵³

SUTLER. A small trader, who follows an army, and who is licensed to sell goods, especially edibles, to the soldiers.⁵⁴

Swimming pool. A pool, especially an artificial pool or tank in a gymnasium, adapted for swimming.⁹⁰

SWINDLE. To cheat; to impose upon the credulity of mankind and thereby to defraud the unwary by false pretenses and fictitious assumptions;⁹¹ to trick and cheat another of his possessions by falsehood, cunning, or conniving scheme.⁹²

Swindled. Tricked or outwitted.⁹³

Swindling. Cheating and defrauding grossly, with deliberate artifice.⁹⁴ It has been said that the word is vague and indefinite,⁹⁵ and of no legal or technical meaning.⁹⁶ The term commonly implies that there has been recourse to petty and mean artifices for obtaining money, which may or may not be strictly illegal,⁹⁷ and thus does not necessarily import a crime.⁹⁸

SWINDLER. The word "swindler" is of Germanic origin.⁹⁹ It is variously defined as meaning a cheat;¹ a rogue; a sharper;² one who lives by cheating; one who defrauds grossly, or one who makes a practice of defrauding others by imposition or deliberate artifice.³ While the word implies a high degree of moral depravity and its essence is fraud,⁴ it does not with certainty import an indictable offense,⁵ nor does it necessarily mean one who obtains money or goods under false pretenses.⁶

SYNDIC. In the civil law, a word which probably corresponds very nearly to "assignee" under the common law.²⁹

SYNDICALISM. See Insurrection and Sedition §§ 1 c, 2 b.

SYNDICATE. A word of business and not of legal art,³⁰ employed widely in the dialect of finance,³¹ describing an association of individuals formed for the purpose of conducting and carrying out some particular business transaction, ordinarily of a financial character, in which the members are mutually interested;³² an association of persons for the purpose of carrying out some enterprise or scheme requiring considerable capital.³³ The word "syndicate" signifies an organization formed for some temporary purpose,³⁴ and it is sometimes applied to a business trust.³⁵

It has been said that syndicates have only comparatively recently been brought into notice as subjects of legal consideration,³⁶ and that they came into English use contemporaneously with the term "promoter."³⁷

In connection with an "underwriting agreement," a syndicate is an association of persons with a community of interest in the fund raised for the purpose of carrying on the particular undertaking.³⁸

It is stated in Joint Ventures § 1 a that a syndicate is regarded as somewhat like a joint adventure, and is merely a joint adventure. On the other hand, it is stated in Partnership § 20 c (1) that a syndicate is no more than a loose form of partnership, and falls within the rules applicable to partnerships. In Corporations § 13 it is said that a syndicate has been held not to be a corporation. Federal taxation provisions relative to syndicates are treated in Internal Revenue, and for specific references in this connection see the index to that title.

SYSTEM. An aggregation or assemblage of objects united by some form of regular interaction or interdependence;⁶⁰ an assemblage of facts, or of principles and conclusions, scientifically arranged or disposed according to certain mutual relations, so as to form a complete whole;⁶¹ a natural combination, or organization of part to part;⁶² an orderly combination or arrangement, as of particulars, parts or elements, into a whole, especially, such combination according to some rational principle;⁶³ a group of divers units so combined by nature or art as to form an integral whole, and to function, operate, or move in unison and, often, in obedience to some form of control;⁶⁴ any complexure or combination of many things acting together;⁶⁵ any methodic arrangement of parts;⁶⁶ a plan or scheme according to which things are connected or combined into a whole;⁶⁷ a scheme which reduces many things to regular dependence or cooperation; a scheme which unites many things in order.⁶⁸

The word "system" imports a unity of purpose as well as an entirety of operation,⁶⁹ and the general signification of the term is plan, arrangement, or method,⁷⁰ as distinguished from sporadic, haphazard, and disconnected acts having no tendency to constitute a complete and homogeneous whole.⁷¹

Among the recognized synonyms of "system" are "manner" see 55 C.J.S. p 664 note 35.1, "method" see 57 C.J.S. p 1076 note 74.1, and "mode" see 58 C.J.S. p 839 note 35, although it has been said that while none of these words, when discriminately used, means precisely the same as "system" yet the

TAKE. The word "take," which comes from the Scandinavian root meaning to grasp, grip, seize, lay hold of,⁹ is considered to be one of the commonest and plainest in the English language,¹⁰ and, while it has been said that the word cannot be easily misunderstood either by a lawyer or by a layman,¹¹ it does have many shades of meaning,¹² and the precise meaning which it is to bear in any case depends on the subject with respect to which it is used.¹³

In one sense "to take" means to acquire;¹⁴ to assume ownership;¹⁵ to receive;¹⁶ to obtain; to procure;¹⁷ to grasp;¹⁸ to seize;¹⁹ to lay hold of;²⁰ to get into one's power;²¹ to get possession of;²² to deprive one of possession of;²³ to get into one's possession or power;²⁴ and in a general sense "take" means to get or gain possession where it was theretofore held by another, and not by the person acting.²⁵

In law "take" means to become possessed of, as by descent or devise.²⁶

The word "take" has various other meanings, and Illustrative use

"So we speak of 'takings' of money, a 'taking' of fish. The 'taking' of a picture is the act of capturing a scene, including its background, on the photographic film, by the aid of the camera, and the accessories attached to it or aiding in the process. The scene and its background composed of drop curtains, painted screens, processed screens, and actors, supply the subject matter which is to be taken. Or, to put it in another way,—the first group is the means, the second the subject of the 'taking' or photographing, just as, in speaking of a 'taking' of fish, we refer to the result of the angling, the catch, and not to the angling itself, net or line, hook and sinker held by primary conception of "taking" is said to be to seize, capture, lay hold of, or secure;⁴⁷ and in this sense is susceptible of a wider range of meaning not limited to being obtained by force or superior power, as to choose, accept, or assume.⁴⁸

"Taking" has been compared with, or distinguished from, "damage" see 25 C.J.S. p 443 note 12, "damaging" see 25 C.J.S. p 445 note 64, "detaining" see 26 C.J.S. p 1249 note 17, "detention" see 26 C.J.S. p 1256 note 16, and "soliciting" see 81 C.J.S. p 389 note 90.

Phrases employing the word "taking" are set out in the note.⁴⁹

—Taken. In its usual signification, "taken" implies a transfer of possession, dominion, or control;⁵⁰ and it may be employed as meaning seized, injured, destroyed, or deprived of,⁵¹ or it may imply an actual physical invasion or appropriation of property.⁵²

"Taken" has been held to be equivalent to, or synonymous with, "deprived" see 26 C.J.S. p 977 note 73, "obtained" see 67 C.J.S. p 71 note 29, and "seized" see 79 C.J.S. p 1024 note 43. The verb "to tap" is defined as meaning to let out or cause to flow by piercing; to open or break into so as to extract something; to pierce so as to let out, or draw off, a fluid.⁸⁹ It is also defined as meaning to touch or strike gently, as with the end of the finger.⁹⁰

Tapping. The present participle and verbal noun of "tap."⁹¹ The word has a well-defined meaning,⁹² and signifies to furnish a hole with an internal screw thread; screw threading a hole.⁹³

TAPE. A narrow fillet or band; a narrow piece of woven fabric used for strings and the like.⁹⁴ "Tapes" have been distinguished from "braid" see 11 C.J.S. p 764 note 89.

TAPIOCA. The starch grains contained in, and derived from, the root botanically known as jatropha manihot.⁹⁵

TARDY. Dilatory; late; not being in season.⁹⁶ School rules as to tardiness are treated in Schools and School Districts § 495 b.

TARE. An allowance for the outside or covering of the article, whether it be box, barrel, bag, bale, mat, etc.⁹⁷

TARGET. A mark fixed, at which aim is taken with a gun or other weapon.⁹⁸

Privilege taxes on dealers selling target rifles are treated in the C.J.S. title Weapons § 2, also 37 C.J. p 224 note 62 [a]. The offense of shooting at a target within the limits of a municipal corporation is discussed in Weapons § 20, also 68 C.J. p 68 notes 28, 29.

TARIFF. As ordinarily understood, a system of rates and charges;⁹⁹ specifically, a cartel of commerce; a book of rates; a table or catalogue, drawn usually in alphabetical order, containing the names of several kinds of merchandise, with the duties or customs to be paid for the same as settled by authority or agreed on between the several princes and states that hold commerce together.¹

The word "tariff" is treated in various connections throughout this work, and for specific references see the indexes to the titles Carriers, Customs Duties and Railroads.

TASTE. As a noun, the word "taste" is defined as meaning the particular sensation excited when a soluble substance is brought into contact with certain parts of the mouth, particularly of the tongue; also, the quality or property that is thus perceived.² "Taste" is further defined as one of the senses which responds to its adequate stimulus with gustatory sensations and which thus gives the perception of the savors and flavors of different things.³

In a somewhat different sense, the word "taste" means style or form with respect to what is appropriate or pleasing, or in accordance with the rules of propriety, etiquette, etc.⁴ Taste, as used in this sense, depends on convention, and sometimes on irrational taboo, and varies with the period, the place, and the training, environment, and characteristics of persons.⁵

TAVERN. The term is defined in Innkeepers § 1 b; and zoning regulations relative to the use of property for tavern purposes are treated in Municipal Corporations § 226 (18).

TAVERN KEEPER. See Innkeepers § 2 a.

TAX. The word "tax," as a noun, is defined in Internal Revenue § 1 as an exaction for the support of government, and is defined in Taxation § 1 in substantially the same terms. The title Internal Revenue deals with taxes imposed by the federal government, such as income taxes, gift taxes, inheritance taxes, taxes on profits, corporations, and on specific articles and transactions, etc. The title Taxation deals with taxes imposed by the state governments and subdivisions thereof, and includes taxes on property, income, gifts, inheritances, and on transfers of corporate stock, and poll taxes, etc.

While the title Taxation deals with taxes imposed by the state governments and subdivisions thereof, taxes imposed by certain subdivisions of the state are treated in appropriate titles in this work. Thus, taxes imposed by counties are treated in Counties §§ 279-285; taxes imposed by drainage districts are discussed in Drains §§ 55-87; taxes imposed by municipalities are treated in Municipal Corporations §§ 1978-2121; and taxes imposed by school districts are discussed in Schools and School Districts §§ 376-413. See also Levees and Flood Control §§ 28-39.

License and excise taxes are treated generally in Licenses §§ 1-78, and, in Licenses § 30 a, reference is made to various titles in this work which treat particular occupations or businesses which are subject to license or excise taxes. Taxes on imports and exports are treated in Customs Duties § 1 et seq.

The word "tax," as a verb, is defined as meaning to assess, fix, or determine judicially⁶ the amount of;⁷ as, to tax the cost of an action in court.⁸

TAXABLE. The word "taxable" is sometimes applied as a noun to persons or to property subject to taxation,¹⁰ and when so used it means something of value.¹¹ It is, however, more frequently employed as an adjective, and as such is defined as meaning subject to taxation;¹² liable to taxation;¹³ subject or liable to taxation;¹⁴ liable to be assessed, along with others, for a share in a tax;¹⁵ subject to assessment, and to be levied upon and sold for taxes.¹⁶

The mere assessment of property has been said not to make it taxable; in order to render property taxable there must be the fundamental right to assess.¹⁷

Canada v City of Shawnee, 64 P 2d 694, 696, 179 Okl 53

(2b) Underground streams are divided into two distinct classes. Those whose channels are known or defined, and those unknown or undefined. Regarding the laws governing these two classes, it must be known that if underground waters flow in well-defined and known channels, the course of which can be distinctly traced, they are governed by the same rules of law that govern streams flowing upon the surface of the earth. But for this purpose the underground water must flow in known and well-defined channels, so that the riparian owner may invoke the same rules as are applied to surface streams. Subterranean waters, whose channels are unknown and undefined, although there are undoubtedly a great many underground streams whose waters flow in confined channels, but whose courses are not known, are all classed with percolating waters—Deadwood Cent R Co. v Barker, 86 NW 619, 621, 14 SD 558

(4) "Intermittent stream" means a stream, the flow of which in the state of nature is interrupted either from time to time during the year or at various places along its course, or both—US v Fallbrook Public Utility Dist., D.C. Cal., 109 F Supp. 28, 78

Phrases

(3) "Universal succession" is the artificial continuance of the person of a deceased by an executor, heir, or the like, so far as succession to the rights and obligations is concerned. It is a fiction, the historical origin of which is familiar to scholars, and it is this fiction that gives whatever meaning it has to the saying "mobilia sequuntur personam", but, being a fiction, it is not allowed to obscure the facts when the facts become important—Blackstone v. Miller, N.Y., 23 S.Ct. 277, 278, 188 U.S. 189, 47 L.Ed. 439.
